

improving, but too slowly to prevent Canada's total energy and fossil fuel consumption from increasing because of increases in automobile travel.

Canada's vast geography and severe climate, combined with its market freedoms, make it difficult for citizens to change personal consumption habits quickly. This makes the effective promotion of a conservation ethic among consumers a real challenge.