There always have been, and presumably always will be a certain percentage of the seekers after learning who leave off their quest until the shadow of ex-amination has completely descended and visions of the long summer vaca-tion are already before their pleasure-sated eyes. Then, with only a couple of weeks, or perhaps only a couple of days, to cram their brains with the knowledge necessary to pass the dread gamut of the examiner, the de-votee who travel's in learning's path rather tardity, awakens to a sense of votee who travel's in learning's path rather tardily, awakens to a sense of oppertunity lost. All during the year there have been temptations to for-sake the delights of the academic life and to become entangled in the gay sounds of pleasure, which have been known in rare cases to appeal to the undergraduate with a tendency to-wards lowity rards levity.
