

Adderly, Que.

DEAR SIR;—Owing to the wonderful cures it has made, I have a great demand for your Seigel's Syrup, and which is still growing. As instances of its high character and value, I may mention that it was in my case of the greatest value, having cured me of Indigestion and Rheumatism of the chest of long standing, and in fact at a time when I had tried several professional men, but without good result. I may also add that many of my customers speak in the highest praise of the value of your medicine, having cured them of long standing ailments; in fact in two instances, nothing can be said in too high praise of its curative properties, it having cured two of my neighbors of the same complaint I was suffering from, but in a much more acute form than my own. They also wish me to say that if it will do any good, I am at perfect liberty to use their names, especially so, that if in so doing it will cause a wider circulation to use these words; it cannot be in too many households. Another striking instance of its value, is that only a short time ago one of my customers drove over to my place, a distance of 25 miles, for the special purpose of procuring a supply of your valuable medicine for the use of his wife, who had been a great sufferer from the same ailments previously referred to, and only found relief when she was recommended and tried your most invaluable medicine.

Yours truly,

EDWARD IVES, P. M.
