Cobalt---Professionals Depress the Prices of Mining Shares

Since the Change of Management Took Place.

Professionals Take Advantage of History of This Mine's Development Absence of Buying Orders to Depress Prices.

World Office, Tuesday Evening, May 5. A reactionary tendency pervaded the mining exchanges to-day, and trading brokers in the absence of substantial buying orders raided prices with the object of forcing out stock. Foster was attacked early by those already short of this stock, and the issue was used thruout the day to assist pressure against other shares. No incentive was held out to investors or outside speculators to buy on the reactions, and the market was consequently pretty much in the hands of those seeking to depress quotations. Trading was well scattered, but the leading active securities were in the forefront of the business. The market closed quife duil, with professionals the most anxious buyers, and with few shares offering at the low prices.
