

WEEK'S WAR SUMMARY

By W. H. STEWART

For the fourth week events in the Dardanelles have claimed the chief interest and attention of the world. This time that theatre was marked by a disaster which, though expected, and provided for in advance, brings home forcibly to the mind that the operations of the allied fleet are constantly beset by grave dangers. Two British and one French battleships of the third class, were blown up by floating mines set adrift by the Turks and Germans just outside the narrow. Slight loss of life was sustained by the British ships, whose crews were saved, but owing to an explosion, which happened on the French ship, almost her entire complement of thirty-six fathoms deep in the strait. The sinking of these men-of-war occurred after they had been bombarded by the Turkish and German batteries for some time at close range, and were returning to their base. Other ships were damaged more or less by shrapnel from the forts and the shore. The damage inflicted on the Turkish forts was not yet known, but unofficial reports say that the three warships did not bring about the discontinuance of operations against the forts. The strongholds of the narrow are, apparently, on the verge of falling. The British cruiser Amphitrite sustained a considerable amount of casualties as a result of cutting the telegraph cable connecting the forts with the shore.

These ship casualties were anticipated by the admiralty some time before, and H. M. S. Queen and Impleable have been sent to reinforce the fleet. The ships destroyed were the irretrievable and the British navy, and the Bouvet of the French navy. Both are ships of the third class, and of value for these operations. The French battleship Henri IV was detached from the Syrian coast to relieve the French squadron.

The press at this point may be regarded as steady and satisfactory, and the time has arrived, or has nearly arrived, for the co-operation of a land force to prevent their partial repairs by the Germans and Turks, and to drive the enemy back in flight to Constantinople.

In the meantime a strong Russian fleet has appeared off the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles, and is reported to have been ordered to occupy the Gallipoli peninsula from the Gulf of Saros.

It is presumed that the Turkish and German forces are strongly entrenched, so as to be able to offer a violent resistance. The procedure of the allied land force will probably be to force a way thru the Dardanelles. The importance of the opening of this great waterway to the commerce of the world has already been pointed out by Washington, which has already begun the negotiation of a commercial treaty with Russia, so as to be in a position to take a large share of the experience of this war is that with modern weapons and the huge system of trenches in use, frontal attacks are extremely costly, even with a huge superiority.

Lord Kitchener's statement that more action of the British government in taking over all factories for the making of war materials confirm the need for preserving the lives of the men is concerned. It must be the labor situation that the gravity of the situation is not to be had a big influence on the government in coming to such an important decision.

In the preparations for the waging of war on a scale unknown in the history of the world before, Lord Kitchener is undoubtedly considering plans to take over the production of the war material. On the other hand, the big movement would, of necessity, be made along the Belgian coast. But the Germans have erected heavy batteries on the coast, and the British ships are being driven back by the heavy guns of the forts.

For the general advance Joffre has 3,500,000 fighting men, and about the same number more, who were untrained at the beginning of the war. To these must be added the men who are being supplied by England. The offensive of the allies will be the invasion of Germany from France is feasible by two routes, both used by Napoleon.

The left flank of the German army alone presents an opening for their ultimate downfall. It is sufficient for the allies to keep a close watch on the Germans in Belgium by a sufficient containing force to take advantage of any weakening of their strength.

Were the Germans not in occupation of Belgium the route thru that country would have been a free highway for the French from that country Sir John French will choose his way, but it must be remembered that an invasion of Ger-

German trade, which will be lost to Germany thru the war.

Germany Blockaded.

Other events of war include the capturing of British merchant ships by German submarines and the putting into effect of a blockade of all Germany, Austria and Turkey. The United States will protest against the blockade, it is said at Washington, but this protest will be made on humanitarian grounds. The chief complaint of Washington is that the British orders-in-council, putting this into effect, do not use the word "blockade," but, on the contrary, it is to be noted, that while relaxing the extreme rigors of a blockade, they have the effect of putting one into effect. Practical and not merely rhetorical shutting off Germany from commercial intercourse with the outside world is what is being done.

From India first comes word of attempts of German agitators and agents to incite the revolution in Persia and to incite the marauding of British officers by the men of native Indian regiments, and next, of the Punjab, engineered from the Pacific Coast of North America. The government in the latter effective measures to deal with both situations.

To carry on the war against Turkey the Indian forces operating in Mesopotamia have been greatly augmented and the Russians are coming down from the Caucasus in overwhelming force to effect a junction with the British army and occupy Turkey in Asia. It will be a complete elimination of Turkish power when the allies are thru with their campaign.

In the war against the Turks the indications point to co-operation by Bulgaria and possible co-operation by Greece. The new neutral Greek cabinet is already divided in opinion and it is not to be taken as a matter of surprise if the war party finally dominates Greek policy.

The most signal achievement of the British army in the west was the capture of Neuve Chapelle in France and the recapture of St. Eloi, which was temporarily occupied by the Germans last Sunday and Monday. German losses at Neuve Chapelle were on a front of three miles and a depth of one-quarter of a mile. The British heavy artillery first bombarded the German positions, blowing out their trenches and the British infantry charged irresistibly with the bayonet. They cleared out the surviving Germans and took over 200 prisoners. The British losses are estimated at about 12,000 men, but in this action the British soldiers took part and distinguished themselves.

French Gains Advantage.

The French troops have gained considerable advantages in the Champagne country where heavy losses were inflicted on the Germans. The French now hold north of the Marne a ridge which commands the country above to a considerable distance. The French have driven the Germans out of Heilmann, Wellerkopf, near the Swiss frontier, and have thus a point from which they can advance at any time and sweep the Germans out of Alsace.

How to Defeat Germans.

As the preparations of the allies to wage war in the west, the beginning of spring operations thru the center of the front are asking what must be done to defeat the Germans. Considering that they are still armed and as stubborn as ever, it will be grasped that this task will be of extreme magnitude. First, they must be decisively defeated, and then Germany must be invaded.

The experience of this war is that with modern weapons and the huge system of trenches in use, frontal attacks are extremely costly, even with a huge superiority.

Lord Kitchener's statement that more action of the British government in taking over all factories for the making of war materials confirm the need for preserving the lives of the men is concerned.
