WOULDN'T STAND FOR A NEW "BOSS"

Ten Sales Girls in E. P. Charlton's Store Go Out on Strike ---What the Strikers Said to the Times.

The city editor's sanctum in the Times office this morning was invaded by half a dozen irate beauties who had a grivance. Not that they were not suffragettes, neither were they delegates to any Women's Congress and they did not want to vote, but they did want to unfold a tale of woe in connection with the strike of the salesgirls in the E. P. Charlton store on King street. Evidently there has been something doing at Charlton's, and these young ladies refused to stand for it.

A tall, "striking" brunette was the spokeswoman of the party, while a petite blonde with an attractive reticent nose occasionally interjected caustic comments upon the treatment of salesladies in general and the boys from Charlton's in particular. They were apparently smitten under a sense of injustice and demanded that their side of the case be given full publicity. The Times man promised to comply, believing discretion to be the better part of valor, but he is unable to print all the things the girls said about the manager of the Charlton store—to do so would possibly involve this paper in a quarrel, so what's the use?

Short of all its picturesque trimmings, however, the girls' story is to the effect that another salesgirl was recently added to the Charlton forces, and the manager proposed to make her forelady, thus advancing her over a number of the girls who had been in the establishment for several years. This the girls resented, and their resentment was increased when it was whispered among them that the manager had decided to dispense with their services and introduce more tractable employees.

They decided to strike, and selected 8.45 on Saturday evening last as the psychological moment. At that time, when the stores were crowded with shoppers, the girls "donned their lids" and marched on the manager. A temporary arrangement was made, and the girls returned to work. They claim, however, that efforts were made to fill their places, and one of the party said this morning that some of the girls using assumed names had replied to ads. for salesladies and found the advertiser to be the manager of the Charlton store.

Armed with this evidence they again went to find the manager at noon yesterday, but he, also being a wise man, walked out and later is reported by the strikers to have telegraphed the store that the girls could quit. They did so, and today there are ten new faces in Charlton's. The girls assert emphatically that they were not and were not discharged.

When the girls told their story to the Times they were very anxious that the papers in Fall River and Bangor should be requested to copy the item, as they believed the manager's action to be unjust, and desired that the head office of the Charlton concern should get their side of the story. The girls, when asked if they had a union, replied with some indignation that they did not require any. "We can handle this all right," "Good morning, and thank you," said the little blonde. Then the rattle of skirts heard on the stairs signified their departure, but it was noticeable that some members of the Times editorial staff were not as alert as usual until the shock had worn off.

Mr. Sharp, manager of the E. P. Charlton store, when even today said that until recently there had been nobody to act as floor-walker during the manager's absence, and feeling that such conditions should cease to exist, employed a young woman who had had a wide experience and explained to the girls why he had done so. This explanation Mr. Sharp stated, was not satisfactory to the girls who, on hearing it, were up in arms and began to make threats.

Mr. Sharp went on to say that the girls did not leave of their own free will, but were discharged. The young lady engaged as floor-walker was still at the store and would remain there, and, with the exception of three girls who took no part in the strike, a new staff had been secured.

POLICE COURT

The seats on King square are not intended for people who want to lie off and sleep.

This announcement was made by Judge Ritchie this morning when John Duggan, who was yesterday afternoon arrested by Patrolman John McColm on charges of drunkenness and profanity was brought into court and pleaded not guilty. Duggan said he boarded at one of the hotels on the square and was just sleeping on one of the benches when the patrolman came along and arrested him.

Fredman McColm swore that the prisoner was drunk, and when told to get up and move along used very bad language.

"You'd had your dinner and were having a siesta," queried the judge.

"What's that, your honor?" asked Duggan.

"You say you were asleep in the square. Well, I don't think you'll go there again for a long time unless somebody pays your fine. You'll be fined $5, or thirty days in jail."

His honor also told Duggan that he could be fined $8 for the profanity.

A man named McCarthy, who had been in jail for begging on Canterbury street, was also brought into court and pleaded guilty, after which he was remanded.

A despatch from Ottawa says that no appointment has yet been made of a successor to Captain Tingley, examiner of masters and mates. It was understood that Captain Sockey, of Yarmouth, had been agreed upon, but that in some technical way he was disqualified. A Halifax man is now talked of—Yarmouth Herald, May 19.
