Fire early this morning destroyed a building in Milford owned by George Cushing and formerly in use as part of the Cushing box mill. The heavy rain beat out the blaze, but not until all the woodwork had been destroyed and only the brick wall left standing.

The blaze was first noticed about daybreak. It is presumed that it had been smouldering for some hours, but the building and this has probably been rendered useless. The scene of the fire was but a short distance from the plant of the St. John Fertilizer Co., but no damage was done to their property. It is understood that the building was insured. An outsider's estimate this morning valued at as being worth between $15,000 and $20,000.
