One glance Jack gives back of him, and this shows that progress is being made—Avis is just in the act of passing into the boot—in a few seconds she will be safe.

Small though this space of time may appear, great events can be crowded into it. History repeats itself in proving this fact.

Lord Rackett advances. His step even quickens, as though suspicions fly into his brain. He has come about far enough Doctor Jack thinks, as he elevates his arm.

The next moment the Englishman utters an exclamation of sudden astonishment as he makes a discovery. Then comes a flash almost at his feet, accompanied by the quick intonation of a Yankee revolver. The lead actually burns his lordship's ear as it speeds by. Just as Doctor Jack has intended it should when he took that sudden aim.

Thinking he has been hit, and at least come very close to death, the Englishman whirls on his heel and dashes forward, at the same time shrieking at the top of his voice:—

"Talls way! They escape by the stern!"

Jack leaves his wife chatting with a Spaniah lady, the wife of one of Balmaced's former ministers, while he goes on deck for a smoke.

In ten minutes she rejoins him, and, to his surprise, he notes an anxious, troubled look upon her fair face.

"It is sickness of the mind, then, not the body, Jack, for you know the motion of the grand old ocean never affects me."

"Something troubles you, Avis—tell me what it is—nothing serious, I hope?"

She smiles now.

"You may laugh at me, Jack, but I have a presentiment of dark days ahead. Of course, my sex gives me the privilege of such a feeling. You men say it comes from a fit of the blues. Never mind. All I know is that the presence of that fas-cinating creature on board the Panama troubles me."

Doctor Jack has intended it should when he took that sudden aim.

Thinking he has been hit, and at least one very close to death, the Englishman whirls on his heel and dashes forward, at the same time shrieking at the top of his volce:—

"Avis, you don't mean the Senorita Marilla?"

She nols her hea

"This way! They escape by the stern!
Bring the yacht to! Send her off on the wind! We'll swamp the boat! We'll drown them all!"

without attempting to take aim, he begins to discharge the remaining chambers of his revolver. One, two, three, four, five shots in rapid order like the pulsations of a heart quickened by excitement, for the weapon is of a new model, the hammer being thrown into position are the discharge is made.

Such a fusilade coming from one quarter is enough to demoralize the stoutest heart, and even these stout British sailors dread to rush forward in the teeth of what seems to be a storm of fire and lead.

Her husband wishes to smoke another cigar ere turning in, and seeking a retired spot indulges in deep thought.

A step behind causes him to turn his head.

"Jack!" says a voice.

"I'm here, Kirke," recognizing the dark figure.

"Thought I saw you come this way. I want a few minutes chat with you."

"Good! What better place than this voil you find. Sit down, my dear fellow.

"Thought I saw you come this way. I want a few minutes chat with you."

"Good! What better place than this very minutes chat with you."

"Good! Thanks. I'm done smoking for to night. Doctor, I have made a discovery."

Jack turns and eyes him in the pecu-

Each man believes his comrades are being mowed down on either side of him, and that his turn will come next. Hence, the feeling of intense alarm that sweeps over them. As if seized with accommon impulse they throw themselves upon the deck. Vain are the shouts of the valiant Lord Rackett, who hides behind a mast and urges them on. It would take more than ten pounds to make most men rush on certain death.

Jack laughs as he sees how well he has accomplished his purpose. The time is ripe now to finish his work.

Not another second should be lost.

Kirke Smith still maintains his clutch, but it is telling upon him terribly.

Of course, there is danger of swamping. The feem rushes along the sides, and even splanes over at times. Avis sits there, slicht yet resolute. Her eyes are that upon the figure clinging to the stern of the yacht, so that she has little thought for the peril of her own position.

thought for the peril of her own position.

That figure now makes a move as if its work in the quarter above might be done, and Avis hold her breath when she case her husband stoop down.

It is no small feat he has before him—everything combines to make it difficult dangerous. Doctor Jack fortunately gossesses a quick eye, steady nerves, and a sure hand. He is eminently qualified to grapple with conditions that would itemay most men.

The madden change in the situation disable from the property of the secondary of the second Marilla?"

- She nods her head and looks solemn.

"It may be only a coincidence that causes her to be on board this steamer. A great many people find it healthy to leave Chili just now, and she may have been on the losing side."

But Avia cannot be convinced; she sees some dark design in the presence of this Chilian beauty who would take her Jack from the one who loves him with all her life.

Fortunately the man who now clutches the wheel and holds fast to it, keeps his senses, or these contradictory orders might have resulted in disaster on board. Another glance Doctor Jack shoots over his shoulder as he clings there, standing like a rock between the one he loves and danger. This shows him how far matters have progressed.

Avis is safe in the boat. She makes her way back to the stern, even while he looks. Larry has succeeded in dropping over the back of the Texan, and just saves himself from going overboard, as they are beginning to cut through the water with some speed.

This shows Doctor Jack that the time has come for him to act. He can see several men rushing toward the stern in response to the shouts of Lord Rackett, and his first thought is to keep them back.

It would be difficult to explain what ideas flash through his mind in that second of time. Perhaps he even conceives that they might fire upon the receding boat. Men in a rage will do many things that their better judgment warns them against.

To prevent this is his first thought. He even has the means in his hand, and will not heattate to employ it.

Without attempting to take aim, he

"Thanks. I'm done smoking for tonight. Doctor, I have made a discovery."
Jack turns and eyes him in the peculiar light from the Southern Cross and such heavenly bodies as chance to beam upon them.

"Indeed! What is it like?"

"There are passengered beard here."

"There are passengers on board not strangers to you, I reckon."

The first that Doctor Jack knows of his peril is when some weapon comes down upon his head with crushing force. At this very instant it seems to him he hears a woman's scream above the whistle of the wind through the rigging. Then rude hands seize him by the legs, he is given a toss, whirls through the air, and after one unsuccessful clutch at the rail, falls into the surging billows as they come feaming and hissing from along the vessel's side, eager to clutch their prey.
