BRITAIN'S SECRETIVE FOREIGN OFFICE AND THE MAKING OF TREATIES.

The fact that the agreement between Great Britain and Russia was signed without any discussion in parliament, and three days after parliament rose, and that no facts are known concerning the actual terms of the agreement, has caused considerable criticism. It is contended that such secretiveness and such isolated action by the British Foreign Office is out of harmony with democratic ideals.

"The matter has been the subject of many questions in parliament," writes the London Daily Chronicle. "The answers on the part of our Foreign Office have always insisted on the necessity of secrecy, and it is noticeable that the terms of this most important arrangement with our old rival in Asia are absolutely unknown, beyond what conjecture may imagine. That this is so points to an anomaly in our democratic constitution, and goes far to justify the German Chancellor's assertion that the British Foreign Office is the most secretive in Europe. The very fact that the agreement has been concluded within a few days of the prorogation of parliament shows the same tendency, for no questions can now be asked, and we are still left in the dark as to the meaning and upshot of the terms."

"No doubt foreign affairs require to be handled with special caution, but it seems to be a flaw in the constitution that a treaty or alliance or any kind of agreement can thus be concluded without knowledge or consent on the part of the people's representatives. Such an agreement is one of the most important actions that can be undertaken by any government, for it binds the future, and a nation can hardly ever set it aside without discredit. No matter how complex a country's confidence in its Foreign Office may be, there is obviously here an element of serious danger. The country has no opportunity of judging the terms of the arrangement; the fact is accomplished, and then criticism comes too late for practical effect."

"Sir Edward Grey has done exactly what the late government did in the case of the Japanese treaty. He has delayed a controversial act until controversy has become impossible," contends the London Daily News. "It is with reluctance that a Liberal newspaper criticizes the act of a minister whose personality exercises a magnetism amounting almost to fascination over the House of Commons. But there comes a point when a regard for democratic ideals overrides personal considerations. A secrecy which culminates in an action which seems so like a defiance of parliament strains loyalty too far."

"As for the 'flaw' which has been discovered in the constitution, the nation has cause to offer thanks," thinks the Edinburgh Scotsman. "It occurs in the constitutions of most civilized states, however democratic may be the spirit of their government. The principle that vests the treaty-making power in the executive of the state, and that leaves it in practice in the hands of its accredited ministers, has been regarded as an essential of the prompt and successful conduct of the business of diplomacy. The notion of the anti-Russian section of the supporters of the government appears to be that the methods of our Foreign Office are too 'secretive,' and that treaties and other agreements into which we enter with foreign powers should be submitted and discussed while still in the making, and should require the sanction of the legislature before being ratified. It is hardly too much to say that if this rule held good in international transactions it would not be possible to conclude any treaty whatever."

EMPEROR WILLIAM OF GERMANY ON PATRIOTISM AND RELIGION.

The Emperor William, at a banquet to the high officials, and representative magnates of the province of Westphalia in the Münster Museum, recalled one of his soliloquies when tempted to be angry.

"Religion, the Kaiser said, 'according to the London Times report, "not the narrow ecclesiastical sense, but as a practical element in everyday life, was the only means by which a union of all classes could be effected."

"The emperor then proceeded to illustrate this contention by relating his personal experience in dealing with the manifold characters with which he had come into contact since his accession. During the course of my long reign," His Majesty said, "I have had to do with a great many people, and I have had to endure a great deal from them. Unwittingly and often, alas! unwittingly, they have caused me bitter pain. And when in moments like those my anger threatened to overcome me, and thoughts of retaliation came into my mind, I have asked myself by what means anger might be soothed, mitigated and forbearance be strengthened."

"The only remedy that I could find was to say to myself, 'They are all human like yourself, and, although they cause you pain, they have within them a soul which comes from the bright realms above, whether all of us want some day to return, and through this soul of theirs they have a part of their Creation within them.' Those who think like that will always be able to judge leniently of their fellow-men. If this thought could find a place in the hearts of the German people in judging their fellows the first condition of complete unity would have been achieved. But this unity could only be attained in the central person of our Redeemer in the Man who called us brothers, Who lived as an example for all of us, and Who was the most personal of personalities. Even now He still goes up and down among the nations and makes His presence felt in the hearts of all of us. Our nation must look up to Him and be united, and must build firmly upon His words, of which He Himself has said, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away.' If it does this it will succeed."

"It is for help in this work that I would ask today, especially from the men of Westphalia, since, as I have already explained, they have shown in their province how to present the fair picture of reconciled differences. They will, therefore, be able to understand me best and before anybody else. Providence old and new, townfolk, farmers and workmen, must band themselves together in this spirit, and all alike, just work together in one same allegiance and love of country. Then our German nation will become the block of granite upon which the Lord our God can build up and complete His work of civilizing the world. Then, too, will be fulfilled the words of the poet who said, 'The German spirit will one day prove the world's salvation.'

"The man who is ready to lend me his aid in this work, and to pass on to me my gratitude, and to let me receive him as my fellow-worker, whoever he may be, or to whatever class he may belong, I believe, that the men of Westphalia will be the first to understand me, and that is why I have addressed myself to you."

"His Majesty's spiritual appeal," says the London Times, "falls upon deaf ears or is met by the cynical retort that there are many useful members of society who can find their way without the crutches of religion."

THE LOCKSMITH'S CHANCE

On the park bench sat two lovers. The passing locksmith dropped his kit and laughed long and merrily. "Why do you laugh?" asked the park policeman.

"I don't get even," confessed the locksmith. "You know how always laughs at locksmiths, so I thought I would laugh at you for the locksmith to laugh at love."

And then the old man laughed himself out of sight.—Chicago News.

TAKES OFF HIS FACE TOO WASH IT DAILY Artificial Jaws and Cheeks Provided for Victim of a Gun Accident.

PARIS, Sept. 21.—Dr. Delair has just presented to the members of the French Academy of Medicine a man with an artificial face. In consequence of an accident with a gun while out shooting, the man had his chin, the lower part of the lower jaw, lips, a portion of his tongue and the whole of his upper jaw and nose blown away. These have been replaced by artificial parts, and the doctor's present expressed astonishment at the marvelous ingenuity with which the work has been done.

The mechanical face is in four pieces. The first consists of a silver groove into which some of the lower teeth are fixed. This is attached to a dental apparatus of the teeth, into which are fixed the remaining teeth. The second piece consists of a dental apparatus in valentine and gold for the upper row of nine teeth. This is fitted to two small protuberances, which fit into the nasal cavities. This also fills up the right sinus, which was smashed in. At the back is a piece of gold mechanism with hooks, used to fasten on the face piece.

The third piece of the mechanical face consists of the chin and lower lip. This is of india rubber, painted to resemble nature. Over the chin a false beard is fixed. At the back are a couple of small bolts, which pass through holes of the teeth, and fix the lip to the artificial lower jaw. The fourth and last piece of the apparatus consists of the chin and nose, also in india rubber, and painted, to which is attached a false moustache. At the back are two small clasps, to which the upper dental piece and jaw are fixed. The man is able to masticate his food with comparative ease.
