No booze nooze

The Utah State Liquor Commission passed a regulation in September which prohibits the advertising of beer or liquor in college publications in that state. The regulation, dealing with ads "primarily or especially appealing to persons under the legal age (21)," states: "No (alcoholic beverage) advertisement or promotional scheme may be placed with any high school, college or university newspaper, or other publications, or for the distribution at institutions of education."

Utah's largest student newspaper, the Brigham Young U. Daily Universe, already has a policy of not accepting alcoholic beverage ads due to the institution's affiliation with the Mormon church. But the state's second largest student newspaper, the U of Utah Daily Chronicle, which accepted beer and wine ads only, estimates the new regulation will cost it $12,000 annually in lost ad revenue.

The ad manager of the Chronicle pointed out in a letter to the Liquor Commission that only 28 per cent of the university's students are under 21 and he reminded the body that city newspapers, which are not affected by the ban, are more often seen by youngsters of high school age or below than college publications.

University attorneys told the Liquor Commission has statutory authority to make such a rule and since the prohibition is against the advertisers placing college ads, not against student newspapers accepting them, any legal challenge would have to come from beer advertisers.

The wording of the regulation is somewhat ambiguous, said the attorneys. It would seem, for instance, to prohibit the sale of Newsweek magazine at student union newsstands, since that would constitute the "distribution at institutions of higher education" of a publication containing liquor ads.

Sidewalk T.V.

Marvin Cole won't be watching TV outdoors anymore. The California teenager recently decided that the best way to beat the unseasonable heat was to take his set outside. He'd just settled in for an evening of cool breezes and tube entertainment, when he got arrested by the police.

The officers said they wouldn't have minded his watching TV, except that he was sitting in the middle of a sidewalk and had his set plugged into a socket owned by the city (of Santa Cruz, California).

After ordering Cole to move along, the officers cited him for stealing electricity.

Let's disturb ourselves

Dear Editor:

I have observed another cold was developing, and it strikes a strong tone of absurdity in my heart. Could it be that our complacent and assinine generation may have to face fear. The little brothers of the baby boom, their enchanted lives, so apple perfect!

Mean, your easy childhood has left you with an empty promise. Now we aren't wanted, can't work.

May we face a war please?

Nothing sails the morality of a population into back bone consciousness faster than a wonderfully fatalistic fight. Nothing less than a dilemma

And was there ever a crowd of youth as unprepared to face a challenge as ours!

Pitted bombs, aduly narrow people. It's such a terrific joke that we rejected the banner of our older brothers and continued on in a flagrantly wasteful lifestyle. Now it's time for the last laugh perhaps.

Wake up, wake up, there's a world to fix!

Attack on rape

Dear Editor:

The Brunswickan has done an excellent job of informing the campus population about sexual assault and it is largely through your efforts that the university has begun to take steps to improve the lighting situation on campus.

After contributing to this important breakthrough, it was very discouraging to read the classified on the rape squad which appeared in your last issue. The individual(s) who submitted this ad shows a total lack of understanding or appreciation for the seriousness of the act of rape, the mentality which underlies such a prank contributes to the high incidence of assault which occurs in this and every other university campus and illustrates how much work remains to be done in educating people about the facts of sexual assault. It is a violent crime, as unfunny as any crime can be and demands serious discussion among men and women on the UNB campus.

Sincerely,
Paul Wilson
