WAR OF GERMANY AND FRANCE IN 1870 IS LIKE THE PRESENT HOSTILITIES

But the Neutrality of Belgium, Switzerland, and Luxemburg Was Respected—Plan of Campaign to March on Paris—The Present Course Seems to be to Advance on the French Capital Rapidly—Long in Preparation—Germany Had Been Massing Arms and Men for Years Before the Attack.

The last occasion on which French and Germans met in conflict was forty-four years ago in the Franco-Prussian War. That war united Germany into an empire, made France a republic, and transferred Alsace and Lorraine from the French to the German flag. Within five weeks from the declaration of war the German armies defeated, captured, or shut up in besieged fortresses practically all the regular French troops. It was one of the shortest and most decisive wars in history. The success of the Germans was due primarily to effective organization, and a carefully worked-out plan of campaign. For ten years before the first shot of the war was fired, the Prussian general staff, under the direction of Field Marshal von Moltke and following the precepts of the great tactician Clausewitz, elaborated a plan of campaign against an enemy with whom they saw a conflict was inevitable. Two objects were aimed at in the plan of campaign against France, to defeat the French armies in the field, and march on Paris. These doubtless are the objects of the present German army in its campaign against France.

French Government Was Weak.

They had calculated the weakness of their opponent. They knew that under the Third Empire the French Government had been corrupt and inefficient. They knew that the French troops would take ten days to mobilize. They knew Austria would not throw in her lot with France unless France showed signs of being victorious. They resolved to crush France before she could get ready, just apparently to crush France before Russia could develop her latent strength.

Third Republic Established.

The establishment of the Third Republic followed the news of the capture of the emperor. The provisional government took steps to call out the French mobile army, the Garde Mobile, and the organization of a Garde Nationale. The French fortresses which had been passed by the Germans on their way to Paris held out stubbornly for nearly two months. The Germans did not capitulate till the end of January, 1871.

OFFERS COMPANY UP TO WAR STRENGTH

Will Captain E. D. O'Flynn with Lieutenants Richard D. Ponton and Percy K. Ketcheson command a company of the Fifteenth Regiment, recruited up to war strength of one hundred and twenty men, to do service for the Motherland? This is the question in the minds of the members of the Regiment.

FRENCH WAR SONG HEARD ON STREETS

War is the mother of strange happenings. The excited spirits of the citizens of Belleville heard this morning the stirring strains of "Le Marseillaise," the great French war song, played by a little foreign band which is in the city to-day. This is the first time the music of "Ye Sons of France" has been heard in our streets. That there was no doubt of the war being in the minds of the musicians was shown when they swung into the music of God Save the King.

STORING AWAY BAGS OF FLOUR

Flour merchants of the city and district are being deluged with orders and inquiries as to prices. The steady wholesale advance on account of the war is being reflected here. Numbers of citizens who buy bread from the bakers have laid in six bags, two bags or five bags as a reserve at a later date. Although they will still continue to buy baker's bread, they fear prices at some distant date will soar. Many of the merchants are behind in their deliveries, but this makes little difference to the buyers as long as they are assured of delivery.
