The Beacon

HEAR the clear note of the bugle And the roar of the calling drum, And I feel the swing of the marching men. And a deep, deep voice says, Come !

For the arrow of duty points forward, Though the heartstrings quiver and break, Yet the voice of my calling country Is one I may not forsake,

THE CALL

For my manhood heeds and listens And bends an attentive ear, And though war's alarm may bring me harm. My road lies plain and clear.

It stretches wide from my own fireside, At the far end stands the foe: And though grim death meets my eager breath, I am ready and glad to go.

For England asks for the sons she lent To the East, West, South and North, And who stands by when a mother's cry nd wist stands by when a mother's cr Is bidding her sons " Stand Forth "?

The shades of the past stand clear at last For the flag by land and sea ; What was duty for Wellington, Nelson and Moore Is doubly duty for me

For they handed down the hard-won crown That is made for the victor's brow. And the glory of deeds afloat and ashore Is one to remember now

Then God send England the strong right arm, To prosper well in the fight, And show that the sea-girt island Is backed by an Empire's might
