PARTED

Apart we tread the pathway, Apart we tread the pathway,

That spans the tide of years
With faces calm and smiling,
With hearts all full of tears;
We hide the bitter sorrow
That lives for you and me—
The world with all its watchers
Must think us glad and free.

So far apart—yet dimly
Sad memory still will bring
The past with all its brightness—
Our life's sweet, sunny spring.
"Twas then we stood together
And wove our trusting dreams,
With all the bliss of dreamers
We watched their golden gleams.

Your hand it was that broke then Your hand it was that broke ther I do not chide you now, For I have seen the impress Of care upon your brow; Yours is the hardest burden, It was your work, you know, That took from life its beauty And left a path of woe.

And now-we miss the gladnes That should have been our o

That should have been our ow.
The tender words of welcome
By us can ne'er be known.
Your face is ever silent—
Save when I meet your eyes—
Ah! then I read so plainly
Regret that in them lies.

We walk apart forever, You cannot come to me.
And I, who fain, would greet you,
Must ever silent be;
The gulf that lies between us
we cannot hope to cross—
For that would only bring us
A deeper pain and loss.

No more through all the journey No more through all the jour Will joy becurs again, And yet, there is a comfort Despite the crael pain, For in the final ending—
It may be far or nigh—
Our lives shell be united
When both of us shall die.
