Odds and Ends.

—James Parton asks:—"Will the coming man drink wine?" He probably will, if there is any left.

—"Will you pass the butter, Mr. Fogg?" asked Brown. "Every time," replied Fogg. The landlady said it was the way Fogg said it that made her mad.

—"I got up at four o'clock this morning," remarked the book-keeper to the boss. "Indeed? You must have been very dry," quietly responded the boss, and the conversation came to an end.

—"Are you married?" asked the judge of a man who had been arrested for vagrancy. "No, I am not married, but my wife is." "No trifling with the court." "Heaven save us! I'm not trifling with the court. I was married, but got a divorce, my wife got married again, but I didn't, so I am not married, but my wife is."

—"Charles," said Mrs. Spendall, "I saw a beautiful costume at Bizarre's to-day, and I should like it ever and ever so much." "And I should like to have you have it," replied Charles, "but really, Clara, I haven't the money to spare." "Oh, you great tease! I know better than that. I saw a brand new check-book in your desk only yesterday, and not one of the checks had been used."

The Sweet Girl Graduate.

She read the valedictory; 'twas deep and analytic,
And scored a splendid victory o'er every carping critic;
But much I fear her logic clear and all her moods and tenses
Were lost upon my listening ear and my enraptured senses.
For when she talked of botany and leaves and grass and rushes,
I only saw the roses red that mingled in her blushes.
And when she spoke of history and turned its time-stained pages,
To me its only mystery was what the dear girl's age is.
She wandered off on x plus z, on cubes and squares grew flowery;
It set me thinking what might be the figure of her dowry.
So pondering down in the parquet I'd set my heart to woo her,
When she picked up a huge boquet some other fellow threw her.
Took out a note, blushed rosy red, smoothed all its pinky creases,
While over my devoted head my castle went to pieces.

Anna Ella Carroll.

The Originator of the Tennessee Campaign.

The following extracts are from a very interesting article in the July number of Outing in reference to the memorial of Anna Ella Carroll, praying for compensation for services rendered to the United States in the war of the Rebellion. The article, which is particularly seasonable at present in view of the great revival of interest in everything connected with the Rebellion, and of the death of a leading actor in the great drama, proves beyond a doubt that Miss Carroll originated the Tennessee Campaign and was instrumental in inducing the Government to abandon the Mississippi expedition and advance up the Tennessee. The writer of the article, after submitting abundant proofs of the justness of Miss Carroll's claim, describes an interview with the heroine, in which she tells her strange story as follows:—

"Not one of the generals or statesmen in that dreadful time of suspense seemed to know what to ought to be done! If you have read the reports of the debates in Congress you have seen how troubled every one was. It was a time of terrible crisis.

"Something must be done! Something must be done! Why isn't something done? was the cry everywhere, the congressmen only voicing the anxiety of the people. McClellan was waiting for Buell to occupy the enemy in the Southwest, and Buell could not move with safety while the Mississippi valley was so entirely in the hands of the enemy, and Halleck was waiting for a chance to storm the great river.

"Every one knew that the river must be opened, but how could it be done? Yet it must be done, for in no other way could we avert foreign interference and secure a foothold in the Southwest. The universal idea was to descend the Mississippi itself. Attorney-General Edward Bates had proposed it, and gun-boats were building for this avowed purpose. Yet the army hesitated, and the country was in despair. I talked with Mr. Lincoln over and over again about this difficulty. The Mississippi valley must be opened; but how could the gun-boats descend the river without endangering their own safety, and thus fatally imperil the Union cause, so weak at that time. This was the difficulty which we all tried to solve; Mr. Lincoln, and Thomas A. Scott, and B. F. Wade, often talking with me on the subject. I knew Mr. Lincoln very well indeed," she said, making a little digression, "and I well remember the first time I saw Mrs. Lincoln. He introduced me to her, and she said, 'Oh, yes, Miss Carroll, the lady you talk so much about!' This shows that he valued my counsel, doesn't it! Though I suppose it seems very egotistic in me to say it. But, you see," she added, "I have to say those things nowadays. Then there was no need of it. You know that Secretary Stanton was invited to the cabinet especially to carry out my plan. Mr. Cameron was getting too old for the burdens of that important office, and the President thought a change for a younger man advisable. So, in spite of Stanton's unpopularity both North and South, he considered him the right one to carry out the new plan for the movement up the Tennessee. And he entered the cabinet pledged to carry it out.

"But I am getting ahead of my story. I went to see Mr. Lincoln very often and wrote to him a good deal about all these matters. I studied the maps over and tried to see how the situation in the Southwest could be improved so as to give the Union forces the commanding position. Like every one else I realized all the difficulties, but I was not satisfied to let them remain difficulties. At last, as I had the time at my command, it was suggested to me that I should go in person to St. Louis to make inquiries, and, if necessary, to explore the country and find out if there might not be some movement or change or something not yet thought of which could be undertaken. This was in the fall of 1861. I went to St. Louis and staid at the Everett House, studied maps and talked with everybody I could get to talk with me. The more persons I talked with the stronger became my conviction that the descent of the Mississippi river, the only movement then thought of, you remember, would be desperate. It was a bold attack upon a formidable enemy with forces entirely inadequate. So disheartened was every one I saw at the prospect of the result of this movement, that on all sides I heard only the prophecies of the downfall of the Union. No matter how strong was the army of the Potomac, it could not reach Richmond till it was too late. Missouri and Kentucky would be redeemed by the South long before then, and the strongly fortified Columbus would prevent our descending the Mississippi and thus destroy the army of the West.

"I talked a good deal with Judge Evans, of Texas, and he only increased my anxiety, since he well understood all the difficulties in the Mississippi valley. I also talked with practical steamboat men; asked them about the river, and about the Tennessee and the Cumberland rivers. Among the guests at the Everett House was a Mrs. Scott, the wife of a pilot, and I also talked with her. She said her husband knew all about the navigation of these rivers, and could tell me any thing I wanted to know. I had already begun to think about the other rivers, you see, though I think it was only at random. When Mr. Scott returned I sent for him, and asked him, among other things, if gun boats could ascend the Tennessee as far as Corinth. He said yes, they could go as far as the Mussel Shoals in Alabama. These shoals are almost on a parallel with Corinth, and when he made this reply the thought flashed upon me, it came to me all in a minute, that here was the solution! The Tennesse river, and not the Mississippi, was the right line of action. I eagerly communicated this idea to the pilot, and he eagerly grasped it. I told Judge Evans, and he said 'that was the move,' and then, rising up in great excitement I exclaimed, 'I'll have it done!' It was, you see, to attack the enemy in the rear; to come upon them by a quick move up the Tennessee, sever the Memphis and Charleston Railroad at Corinth, cut off the enemy's source of supply, advance upon Vicksburg, leave Nashville to its fate, and give the army of the Potomac a chance to advance. Yes, I said, 'I'll have it done,' and I did."

The way in which Miss Carroll repeated these words, with arm uplifted, and eyes as bright as stars, was electrifying. "It was the movement in the rear," she continued, "surprising the enemy and cutting off their connection with Richmond, that won us the victories in the Tennessee valley. No one had seen this, until the thought came to me that day in my little room at St. Louis. This was early in November, 1861. I wrote at once to Thomas A Scott, and also to Edward Bates, that I believed the Mississippi expedition would fail; and urged them to have the gun-boats tranferred to the Tennessee, and to make that river the line of action. Soon after, I returned to Washington and communicated my plan to Assistant Secretary Scott. When I explained it to him he threw up both hands and exclaimed, 'My soul, Miss Carroll, you have saved the country!' And I said to him, 'if you will carry this out you will cover yourself with glory!' For I thought absolutely nothing at the time of my own part in the transaction.

"The plan was submitted to President Lincoln, and approved by him with enthusiasm; and after some necessary delay he, as Commander-in-chief, ordered the change of plan by which Grant, under Halleck's orders, advanced up the Tennessee, and finally met the enemy at Shiloh. Halleck at this same time had a plan of his own for attacking Nashville in aid of General Buell's march on Knoxville, but the President's orders were superior, and, as his subordinate, Halleck carried them out substantially as set down in my plan. Colonel Scott went West, and on his return told me that this change of plan had saved the country millions. If they had carried it out sooner and more quickly he might have been able to say that it saved not only millions of money, but countless lives. The diversion to Donelson gave the enemy time to re-enforce their strength, and came well-nigh bringing us a defeat at Shiloh. I suppose I seem terribly egotistic, talking so much about myself," concluded Miss Carroll, "but I have to seem so if I speak of it at all. I was chosen to do this work, and all I ask is simple justice. That is all."

In addition to this thrilling story, Miss Carroll told me of her acquaintance with the leaders of the Confederacy, of her relations with Governor Hicks, and of a conversation with General Grant concerning the Tennessee campaign. She was a personal friend of Jefferson Davis, and tried hard to persuade him to remain in the Union, prophesying to him that he would lose all if he persisted in his intent to secede. He, in turn, tried to persuade her to remain true to the South.

But perhaps the most interesting story was her interview with General Grant. At this time she was considering whether to apply to Congress for remuneration for the large sums expended (by request of the War Department), in printing and distributing her pamphlets, and also for recognition as the author of the Tennessee plan. She met General Grant, and told him the story here related. "He was like a child," she said. "He asked me all about it, and how I came to think of it; and until I described my plan to him, and showed how success came from its consummation, I am convinced that he had no conception that it was this that brought us victory. He evidently had thought nothing about it, until I called it to his notice. After I had pointed out to him how and why it was that the Tennessee river instead of the Mississippi, was the proper line of attack, as his successes had proved, he exclaimed, 'Why, every soldier ought to have thought of it!' 'Yes,' I replied, 'every soldier ought; but who did? Did you, General Grant? And if you did not, who did?' And he was silent. He never claimed to have thought of it, nor has any one else."

Such is the story of Anna Ella Carroll, though it is impossible to reproduce its vivid narration. She was God's agent in the nation's day of peril. She it was whose genius grasped the situation and solved the problem whereby "The Father of Waters again goes unvexed to the sea."

This being so, the question at once arises why she has not long ago been acknowledged as the heroine of the civil war, and awarded her legitimate place in history by the side of the men who led our cause to victory. The answer to this query is found in the exclamation of Mr. Lincoln, when he was asked whether the author of the plan should be made known. He said: "The officers would throw off their epaulets if they knew they were acting on the plan of a civilian; and, good God, if they knew it was a woman, the whole army would disband!"

JACK JOSLYN (Alias Strapping Jack.)

—The Iowa prohibition law has been in force a few days over a year, and the result shows that while it has been successful in small places, in cities there is more drunkenness than under the license system. Reports from 29 leading cities and towns show 150 more open drinking places in those towns than there were a year ago. Davenport has 20 more saloons, Burlington 41, Council Bluffs 13, and Ottumwa, where the license fee was $1,000, has 94 more, and this does not count the doubtful and secret rum-holes that always spring up more plentifully under prohibition than under license. The revenue from licenses last year was $200,000, and there is some dissatisfaction at the loss of that.

—A man walking in a field near Cincinnati was killed by lightning, the fluid passing up from the earth to the cloud. This was proved by the persons who saw the line of fire go upward; by the leather driven into his foot from the sole of his boot, and by the perforation in the top of his hat, the ragged edge pointing upward.

He Acted Wisely.

"I am so weak I can hardly move, all run down with a Chronic Summer Complaint," said one gentleman to another on our street the other day. "Now, take my advice," replied his friend, "go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I never have known it to fail in curing any kind of Summer Complaints."

—One of the hardest things for a boy to do is to convince himself that the pants made for him by his mother, look just as if they had come from a clothier's.

Unknown.

There is no remedy known to medical science that can excel Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, or any form of Summer Complaint afflicting children or adults.

☞This cut represents my PATENT FIRE KING COOKING STOVE, with the Oven end and Lining partially drawn out, as it appears while being cleaned or when a new Lining is being replaced.

THE above Stove I invented and patented in 1876, and at the present time hundreds are in use, giving perfect satisfaction. A large number have been in constant use for eight years, and the repairs have been very trifling, in many instances none have been required. This valuable experience should be sufficient evidence of their durability, which is accounted for in the following: It has instead of a Lined Fire Box, two heavy Currugated Cylinders, which obviate the expense connected with all square Cooking Stoves of being compelled to renew Linings and Grates, at least once or twice every year. The heat being radiated from the Cylinder to floor where most needed, overcomes a serious objection to all kinds of ordinary Coal Cooking Stoves. The Cylinders are situated directly under the cover holes, and a fire may be made in one or both, thus adapting it for use either in winter or summer, with equal satisfaction, besides effecting a great saving in fuel. I have also attached the Patent Telescope Oven to all my Elevated Oven Wood Stoves such as the Waterloo, Niagara, Star, &c., causing the thousands using them to exclaim, My stoves are worth Ten Dollars more than the same kind made by other Foundries. The Trade and Retail purchasers will please bear in mind the fact that although a great advantage is claimed for my own above all others, they cost no more, and being the sole manufacturer, and patentee, no other Foundry can supply. Enquire for Fawcett's Patent Telescope Oven, and if your dealer has none on hand send direct to the Sackville Stove Foundry. I am adding several new and handsome patterns this season which with my former large variety of one Hundred Different Patterns and Sizes of Cooking, Parlor, Office and Hall Stoves, also Farmers' Boilers, Hollow-Ware, Ploughs, Stove-Pipes and Tin-Ware, comprise the most complete assortment offered by any manufacturer in the Lower Provinces. ☞Terms and prices will be found as favorable as can be obtained elsewhere.

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS

MAKE NEW RICH BLOOD

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS.

Thirty years study and experiment have been given to perfecting the formula for Parsons' Pills, and the universal judgment of the highest medical authorities, scientists, and men of learning, is that our formula is the best yet devised by the brain of man, and should rank with the wonderful discoveries of the world. No family should be without them, for there is no other remedy in the world capable of conferring so much benefit, excepting, possibly Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. The information contained in the wrapper around each box is worth ten times the cost of a box of pills; it shows how to avoid and how to cure all manner of diseases, and how to correctly interpret the symptoms thereof. Sold everywhere, or sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. A valuable illustrated medical book sent free to all who send their address. DR. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House St., Boston.
