Sunday.

We realize, made up of stiff clay.

The south-looking children of sorrow we, While not over-jolly to day.

Resolve to be wretched to-morrow.

We can't for a certainty tell.

What mirth may molest us on Monday.

But at least, to begin the week well.

Let us all be unhappy on Sunday.

That day, the calm season of rest.

Shall come to us as freezing and frigid.

A gloom all our thoughts shall invest.

Such a Calvin would call over-rigid.

With solemn from morning till night.

To preachers a praise and delight.

Who think not that sermon can weary.

All tradesmen cry up their own wares.

In this they agree with us together.

The mason by stone and lime sweats.

The tanner is always for leather.

The smith still for iron would go.

The schoolmaster stands up for teaching.

And the person would have you to know.

There's nothing on earth like his preaching.

The face of kind Nature is fair.

But our system obscures its influence.

How sweet is a breath of fresh air!

But our rules do allow us indulgence.

For people, their walks and green bowers.

Might be free to the poor man for one.

But no, the glad plants and gay flowers.

Must bloom or smell sweetly on Sunday.

What thought a good precept we strain.

How many may martyr us on Monday.

What thought in this pulling the rein.

We may draw it so tight as to break it.

Alas! we forbid folks to roam.

For fear they get social or frivolous.

But of course they can sit at home.

And get dizzily drunk upon whiskey.

Then, though we can't certainly tell.

How many may martyr us on Monday.

At least, to begin the week well.

Let us all be unhappy on Sunday.

STRANGE CASE OF DOCTOR JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Continued.

There, at least, he was not denied admittance; but when he came in he was shocked at the change which had taken place in the doctor's appearance. He had his death warrant written legibly upon his face. The rosy man had grown pale; his flesh had fallen away; he was visibly older and older; and yet it was not so much his face as his physical decay that arrested the lawyer's notice, as a look in the eyes of a man that seemed to testify to some deep-seated terror of the mind. It was unlikely that the doctor should fear death; and yet that was what Mr. Utterson was tempted to suspect. "Yes," he thought, "he is a doctor, he must know his own state and that his days are counted; and the knowledge is more than he can bear."

And yet, what was Mr. Utterson's own state? He was not a man of great physical strength, but he was a man of great mental strength. He was a man of great energy, but he was a man of great reserve. He was a man of great courage, but he was a man of great caution. He was a man of great wisdom, but he was a man of great mystery. He was a man of great power, but he was a man of great restraint. He was a man of great influence, but he was a man of great discretion. He was a man of great knowledge, but he was a man of great secrecy. He was a man of great skill, but he was a man of great modesty. He was a man of great talent, but he was a man of great humility. He was a man of great ability, but he was a man of great reserve. He was a man of great strength, but he was a man of great weakness. He was a man of great courage, but he was a man of great fear. He was a man of great wisdom, but he was a man of great folly. He was a man of great power, but he was a man of great impotence. He was a man of great influence, but he was a man of great insignificance. He was a man of great knowledge, but he was a man of great ignorance. He was a man of great skill, but he was a man of great clumsiness. He was a man of great talent, but he was a man of great stupidity. He was a man of great ability, but he was a man of great incapacity.
