Continuing, she said, "He told me that he had been keeping something from me but that he could keep it no longer, and that he was embarrassed in his business. He told me that soon after we went to bed. He was not a man to break down; he always kept up. I have known him to cry at other times but he was not aware that I knew of it. About 7 o'clock this morning, he came out and kindled the fire and asked me to make him some gruel. When it was ready he could not take it. He then told me that he was going to the shop and that he would be back soon. It was after 8 o'clock when he returned and he was just about the same as when he went away. After he went to lie down he took one spoonful of greel. I then returned to the dining room and soon heard him give such a groan. I asked him what was the matter, and he said; 'I have taken strychnine.'" Mrs. Griffin further said that she found the bottle under his pillow. She had never heard him say that he would take his life; but she had heard him say when some one was dead, that he wished it was him.

Elizabeth Beasley was 'the woman for said first gone. When she arrived "He was making a terrible noise; his arms and body were stiffened and his head was thrown back. The last words he said were 'O, Lord how long will I suffer this?' He was in great agony. I lately heard him say 'the would not make much difference if I were to his death. I never attached any importance to it."

The inquest was then adjourned until Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock at the Police Station.
