THE BRITISH COLUMBIA EXHIBIT.

The British Columbia exhibit is in the western end of the Dairy Hall, and comprises samples of grain, roots, vegetables, wood, minerals and truit grown in that Province. British Columbia is a land of large growth, and the dimensions of everything shown is predigious. A sample of corn is fourteen feet long and the cat straw corn is fourteen feet long and the cat straw is far longer than any grown in Ontario. corn is fourteen feet long and the oat straw is far longer than any grown in Ontario. The small fruits, such as raspberries, strawries and gooseberries, are such an rmous size that one would be credulous where. Who has not eaten canned salmon caught in Columbia waters? In the exhibit is a large number of cans of various sizes and of a different pattern than those formerly used. The slim, long can has been discarded and one shorter and more convenient will be used in the future. It is in the product of the forest that this Province excels; there are samples of the various species of wood indigenous to it hown, and its principle characteristic is "bigness," like all its other products. There are some fine samples of slate, the There are some fine samples of slate, the Supply of which is unlimited. ments of the darkers.—Few people recognize the importance and responsibility of the seedsman's work in relation to progressive and successful farming. Old varieties of the standard grains, for example, constantly tend to degenerate and decay. That is a law of nature. If large yields of grain, high in quality, are to be secured new sorts must replace them. To originate such by cross-fertilization and subsequently to develop varieties of superior merit until placed within reach of the farmers, is a slow and costly process, requiring patience and skill by experts, be sides which probably nine attempts out of the are failures. For the successful kinds, the enterprising seedsman is ever on the the enterprising seedsman is ever on t watch.
