The Nineteenth Century Club is an organization that will consist of an equal number of men and women. It is hardly to be expected that they will agree on all subjects; but it can surprise no one to learn that Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is unanimously pronounced the most successful remedy mously pronounced the most successful remedy extant for pulmonary consumption, as has been demonstrated in hundreds of cases; it positively arrests this disease and restores health and strength, if administered in its early stages. Lady Harberten's Views.

The blame for the defects of women's dress belongs, in Lady Harberton's opinion, to men. They are the authors of all female woes. The doctors are no better than the dressmakers, and the garments of hospital nurses are as sternly condemned by her as the fashionable fronks desired by the great Worth. Thurst frocks devised by the great Worth. Things are bad now and have never been any better. There have been changes in small details, but are bad now and have never been any better. There have been changes in small detais, but no real progress. As for her own divided garment, Lady Harberton, modestly but with singular taste in metaphors, described it as simply a scaffolding on which she hoped others would build. She scolded the doctor who said a woman's waist was round. The true shape, in the opinion of this reformer, is an ellipse. Be the true shape or the actual shape what it may, the female waist ought not to be made to support a mass of dry goods; no, not even with the hips to help. On this point her Ladyship is clear. Perhape the remark has been heard before. Nor ought the hips "to be compressed by clothing." The effect is to shorten the step, and the effect of shortening a woman's step is that "double the distance is walked over the same ground." Here I suspected an error in the text, but on looking into a peerage I discovered that Lady Harberton was born in Malone House. County Antrim, and I apologise to the reporter for doubting her accuracy. Nor is it discret to set limit to what this females orator will allege. She proclaimed to her audience on Wednesday that "women have totally reversed the whole idea of their own body; whereas the larger and more solid portion of their attire should be the lower." What will the anatomists and physiologists say to this view of the structure of the female frame? Nothing, probably, and I shall say nothing, for I cannot venture to suppose that I am writing to ladies only. But does Lady Harberton hope to persuade her own sex so to adjust their own raiment that their shoulders, let us say, shall be the broadest part of the figure? She, or perhaps it was Mrs. Pleiffer, advised us all to go to the British Museum and look upon the types of female beauty which the Greeks have left. Some of us have been there already, but who has seen the female body treated on this novel theory of this titled dress reformer?

—A purgative medicine should possess tonic and curative, as well as cathartic properties.

Mar Pelific a vived ua all to got to the Tribian Misseum and look upon the types of female with the property of this titled dress reformer.

Fancy or Fact. In town I hear, scarce wakened yet, My neighbor's clock behind the wall Record the day's increasing debt, And Cuckoo! Cuckoo! faintly call.

Our senses run in deepening grooves,
Thrown out of which they lose their tact,
And consciousness with effort roves
From habit past to present fact.

o, in the country waked to-day,
I hear, unwitting of the change,
A cuckoo's throb far away
Begin to strike, nor think it strange.

I count to learn how late it is, Until, arrived at thirty-four, I question, "What strange world is this Whose lavish hours would make me poor?"

I have it! Grant, ye kindly Powers,
I from this spot may never stir.
If only these uncounted hours
May pass, and seem too short, with Her.

But who She is, her form and face.
These to the world of dream belong;
She moves through fancy's visioned space.
Unbodied, like the cuckoo's song. -James Russell Lowell in March Atlantic.

Like Booth in His Carriage, From the Washington Oritic,

A wealthy young amateur with a fond mother was fired with fine frenzy, and con cluded to go on the stage as Hamlet. "Don't you think," said his mother to a friend one night, after he had been on about a month, at a cost of about $20,000, "my boy will be a very great tragedian some day?" "Well, really, I can't say," was the cautious reply; "but in one particular he is very like Booth." "Ah, thank you," said the fond mother; "in what particular pray?" "He always comes to the theatre in a carriage, madame."
