

passing their examinations, but now, that the supply is about up to the demand, it is pleasing to note that the church is moving in the direction of insistence upon the requirements laid down. It is to be hoped that, instead of retrograding, our Church shall advance and shall continue to lead the way in matters educational; and we look for the early coming of that time when all who enter the ministry of the Presbyterian Church shall be required to take a full University Course.

