

B. Specific Anticipated Effects

1. Overview of aggregate data

As in the October and earlier surveys, respondents were asked to consider a number of possible outcomes or consequences of free trade with the United States and to indicate the extent to which they think these outcomes are likely. The results of responses to these statements appear in Table 4, which includes data from the November/December 1987 research as well as from surveys conducted in August and October.