

Under the circumstances, the Province being nearly ruined, the Ministry ruled by organized and mercenary rings, the Constitution infringed, and the liberty of the subject threatened, and the authority of the Crown set at nought, the Lieutenant-Governor deemed it his duty to dismiss his Ministry and appeal to the people. The result of the elections will show whether his confidence in them was well-founded or not.