

WILEY & PUTNAM'S LIBRARY OF CHOICE READING.

"BOOKS WHICH ARE BOOKS."

Notices of the Press.

"THIS library is put up in beautiful style, as well as offered at a very cheap rate. We are pleased to see such good paper and print, for we think the habit of reading ill-printed, dingy books deteriorates not only the eye-sight but the taste. Books, if good for anything, deserve a cleanly dress. To degrade them, even outwardly, has the same tendency as the use of tobacco, to pollute and vulgarize all the habits of life."—N. Y. Tribune.

"This is printed in a cheap form, but so attractively that the volumes really invite perusal. The intention of the publishers is to supply the demand for the choicest literary publications of the day—to present that reading which cherishes refined and cultivated taste, and affords at once instruction and delight."—Baltimore American.

"Wiley and Putnam's 'Library of Choice Reading.'—Under this title, a series of the most valuable and agreeable reading has been commenced in New York, to supply a deficiency in the general character of 'cheap literature.' The works already published are admirable selections for a library, and as the publishers express the determination to issue nothing but 'books which ARE books,' there is good reason to believe that others equally worthy of universal circulation are in store; and their circular convinces us it is so."—Auburn Journal.

"Wiley and Putnam have projected a plan of a Library of Choice Reading, which is every way worthy of commendation, encouragement and success. Their design is to furnish a class of books, whose only merit shall not be the smallness of their price. The selection of the works thus to be published has been made by one of our most elegant scholars and happiest critics; and, as will be seen on referring to the circular, with much discriminating taste and good judgment. They will all be found to be books worth the buying, and what is more, worth reading and remembering."—N. Y. Post.

"'Eöthen' is the product of a very clever, observant, witty person. We thank the publishers for the handsome style in which they have produced this new series of excellent works."—Evening Gazette.

"'Eöthen' is a very original and charming new work, to which, as an intellectual treat, we have taken an especial fancy."—Smith's Weekly Volume.

"After the deluge of several publications of purely light—very light—reading, which we have had in this country, we perceive with pleasure indications of a more healthy taste, and these well selected volumes, so admirably printed, will prove but a foretaste of more palatable food than, as book-worms, we have lately been accustomed to."—New York Post.

"Messrs. Wiley and Putnam have worthily commenced their 'Library of Choice Reading.' The selections are good, and the works most handsomely 'got up.'"—Tribune.

"This is a most valuable new series of books, which cannot fail to be read with eagerness everywhere. The works are well selected, cheap, and most elegantly printed, which must give them a universal circulation. The project is an admirable one, and as it is in good hands, we cannot doubt its success."—N. Y. Courier.
