

AFTER THE WAR—CANADA FIRST

The creation of right relations between wage-earner and employer is our most important duty. Honest co-operation between these two must mean good times for all of us who live under the British flag. Nobody who thinks wants to see industrial discord.

Labor can stand on its war record, for in none of the Allied countries did organized labor come more quickly to the support of the government than here. The co-operation of labor means more to industry than any other one factor. And it is a co-operation that is above price, for we are fortunate beyond all other nations in the character and the skill of our workmen.

United We Stand---Divided We Fall

Today the morale of the Canadian wage-earner is higher than ever before. He is as eager as any capitalist to enter upon an era of harmonious industrial relations.

We in this country are making many articles that were not made here before the war.

The first thing to do is to preach a new crusade of co-operation and fair dealing; after that, put these teachings into effect and create a lasting economic brotherhood.
