severity that is meted out to the com-non thief and burglar. It is not improbable that a score of highly respectable citizens of Winnipeg knew of Chamberlain's doings and were to all intents and purposes accessories to his crime. The remarks that we make in the Chamberlain case will apply to all cases of personation. The unlucky individual who undertakes the job is generally but an instrument in the hands of others. The real offenders are those who commission the persona-tor, and when we make a charge of this kind we implicate a large section of the community. In our opinion

Charlie Chamberlain's position is that

A Higher Ideal!

One great basis principle of this store is mutual dependence. To thrive and grow each stock must be best. The aim of all is to reach first place, and no lower ideal can be permitted. And so when the top is reached by any stock we must lift the top. We're now doing this at many points.

You'll be older than you are now before you catch us "looking backward." The whole trend of this business is towards finer goods, brighter displays, handsomer styles and better values. Aristocratic novelties are here-more and more of them each season, and almost nobody counts their shopping

The Proportionate Share. gether too prevalent in municipal and portations; special per yard at3: tain other moral offenders, who have violated the laws of society by being found out. Last month a case of personation was tried here in Toronto. William Rose was found guilty of the offence in the recent municipal elections. He was sentenced by the court to 30 days' imprisoment, and at the end of 11 days he was released, the High Court holding that under the existing law the prisoner should have had the option of paying a fine. Nobody here seemed to think that the 30 days' sentence was ridiculously small, and yet Liberal members of Parliament are indignant because Chamberlain, the Winnipes personator, was liberated one year before his term of three years had expired. Some of them, indeed, were indignant because was an ot sentenced to penitentiary for thirty years, instead of three. The crime was exactly the same in both cases. The theory is that punishment is inflicted on criminals not as an explaint on of crimes committed but because of its supposed efficacy as an example to prevent others from committing similar offences. Now, the people in Toronto stand just as much in need of a terrible example as do three. Why, then was not known or claiming Toronto as his native hearth. Now, the people in Toronto stand just as much in need of a terrible example as do the resu to 30 days' imprisonment, and at the in need of a terrible example as do the residents of Winnipeg. In fact a little more so. Charlie Chamberlain himself has the honor of claiming Toronto as his native heath. Why, then, was not Rcse sentenced to two or three years' imprisonment? The reason is this: While personation is, as we have said, a serious offence, it has been more or less condoned by both political parties.

The forecast which The World correspondent telegraphed last Friday is absolutely correct. A close examination of the measure demonstrates this.

The bill consists of 112 clauses, the preamble reciting the steps taken up to the time the Parliament of Canada was vested with power to legislate on the subject. Clause 2 provides for the constitution of the Separate School Board of Education for Manitoba, the Governor-General in Council being empowered to make any appointments to this board in the event of the Lieut.
