Charles Tupper. The former is not an Imperial measure in any sense of the term. When the working of Canada's preferentia tariff is analyzed it comes down to this that the only persons benefited by it are a certain number of British manufacturers. The British Government derives no benefit from it. The Empire as a whole is not benefited. What the preferential tariff really does is to give to British manufacterers a certain amount of business that therwise would be transacted by Cana dians. The policy advocated by Sir Charles Tupper, on the other hand, is of truly imperial importance. It involves such a re-arrangement of the tariffs of the Mother Country and colonies as will make the Em pire more self-contained and more inde-pendent than it now is. The British Empire is a big idea and a great fact, but it has several weak features, and one of thes is that the Empire has to depend on for eign countries for its food supplies and for Ing out, in insisting in fact, that the Empire shall become self-supporting and independent of nations that any day may become its enemies? Of what benefit would Sir Wilfrid Laurier's preferential trade be to the Empire in the event of war being declared against her by one of the great rowers? The food supply is not a question in the South African war, but "

We know of no better way in which Canada of others who intended to go, but when the insulting attitude of the French papers have given most self-respecting and protective tariff, would be money well invested. This is the sort of policy that the Conservative party stands for.

When Mr. Whittington left Toronto for England, he was accompanied by "Billy" Maie, the clever Rugby football playet and all-round athlete, who was a long time a non-commissioned officer in the Royal Canadian Dragoons, Maile is now in South Africa, with the Lancashire Ycomanny. Two more Canadians, whom ar, Whittington met in England, and who have gone to the front, are William Weeks, who was a jeweller in Orllins, and his brother James, who is an ex-member of the Northwest Mounted Police. "England is a great place for Canadian visitors now," said Mr. Whittington. "Since Pairdeberg the people have been looking up Canada on the map. Why, when I first went over, I was with some military friends, and I told them I had been a member of the crack regiment of Canada for a long time, and one of them remarked, 'You must have been in the Cuban war, then.' I thought he was joking, but found out he was in earnest, and I was surprised at his ignorance until I found many more like him."

"The way the Canadians at the front have acquitted themselves has made a wonderful stir in England, and there are several movements already on foot to have the regiments stay for a time at some of the principal barracks in the Old Country, and they will be treated to the best that there is in the Empire. The people there are getting onto the fact that Canada has nothing to do with the United States, except as a good neighbor," said Mr. Whittington.
