"In my judgment the canal would undoubtedly constitute the main compete with it on the score of econthe shipment of iron ore to Great Britain is a most important one. At present most of the importations come from Bilbao, Spain, and the vessels engaged in the traffic perforce have to whereas in coming to this country they, would be able to carry full loads of This important difference would inevitably mean that a great iron ore business with England would be worked up if the canal gave access by water to the deposits. There would be two other reasons for this: Firstly, the ore can be mined at a lower figure, and, secondly, it is of a higher grade and better quality than the Spanish
