Dealers who took profits on the builges were credited with replacing their lines on the small declines.

There was little evidence of selling pressure thru the day, and the country offerings were rot large. Local cash sales aggregated 15,000 bushels wheat, with word from the seaboard that 90,000 bushels of wheat liad been sold for export, including 500,006 bushels of new American winter wheat.

Corn, which was inclined to drag at the outset, was braced by the strength of wheat, but the advance was checked by an abundance of offerings and prices made little headway.
