FLOWERS ARE UNPICKED PERFUME MAKING STOPS

The unpicked flowers is a serious handicap to the manufacture of French perfumes. For want of sufficient labor the orange blossom cannot be gathered and will probably result in a great shortage of many favorite and world-wide known scents. It has been hoped to obtain the help of women, but few have been obtained so far, and it is now almost too late to save the situation. Scent-makers are further handicapped by a lack of water, an accident having blocked the Siague Canal that was specially built to supply the many perfumery distilleries in the hills.
