DUFREMAN'S A Mid-Summer Sale of Large Proportions

In view of the great success which attended our Semi Annual Sale of last February, we have decided to put on a similar sale commencing FRIDAY morning. We intend to make this a greater bargain feature than the previous sale because the stock is larger and we are more anxious to reduce it, so those who patronized the former sale will know what to expect during this. As before, everything in the store will be reduced, no bear in mind it is not a sale of old stock but the newest arrivals can be bought at the reduced figures. No matter what your dry goods wants are, they can be satisfied during this sale at a saving of from 20 to 50 p.c.

A St. John Boy at the Champlain Tercentenary

Former Member of Scots Boys Brigade of St. Stephen's Church Describes the Visit of the Regiment to Quebec at Tercentenary.

The following descriptive article was written for the Times by a young man who until last year had been a member of St. Stephen's church, Scots Boys Brigade of this city. He went to Montreal for the summer and joined the Fifth Royal Highlanders and with them went to the Quebec tercentenary.

The Fifth Royal Highlanders were the strongest regiment to visit Quebec; being about 500 strong, while no other regiment numbered over 400. On Friday, July 17, an advance party of 40 or 50 men had gone to Quebec, but the main body did not leave until Sunday, July 19. We marched down to the wharf of the steamer "Trois Rivières" about 4 p. m., headed by our Second Battalion Pipe Band, which is acknowledged to be the best in Canada, and which consisted of over 30 pipers and drummers. We wore our dress parade uniforms, consisting of red tunics, plaid, busbies and, of course, kilts. A light rain was falling, which continued all night, but it did not appear to trouble the immense crowd which had gathered to see us off. On the same boat were the Victoria Rifles, of Montreal, numbering over 300. Between 6 and 7, amid much cheering, we started on our memorable trip. The beautiful scenery of the St. Lawrence River did not appear to very great advantage on account of the rain and the growing darkness; we could see little beside lighthouses and dikes. As there were over 800 of us, we could not be very particular as to where we slept, but had to be content with sleeping on the deck. About midnight, we passed Three Rivers.

and as we passed each wharf we gave three hearty cheers. It was evidently washday on the French vessels, for as we passed the "Leon Gambetta," we could see Admiral Laungueberry's spare shirt waving in the breeze. Quebec, with the Citadel, the Dufferin Terrace, and the Plains of Abraham on one side of the river, with the heights of "Levis" on the other; and the magnificent view vessels between, presented a very beautiful scene indeed. Immediately upon arriving at "Levis," we disembarked and proceeded by the "V.A." to our quarters at the Hotel de Camp Levis, a few miles distant. Among the regiments at Camp Levis were, the Victoria Rifles, Royal Highlanders, 62nd Fusiliers, the 6th, 8th, 8th, and the Composite Regiment from New Brunswick, also Army Medical and Army Service Corps. The 6th, was the only regiment at the Quebec Tercentenary which was composed entirely of French-Canadians. The camp was under the command of Brigadier-General Lawrence Buchan, of Montreal. When we reached camp, we were allotted to our tents and served with a hearty breakfast; which was very welcome to men who had eaten nothing for nearly 24 hours, except two sandwiches and two cups of coffee. We spent the morning in taking possession of our tents and cleaning our uniforms. In the afternoon, we received permission to leave camp, and most of us went over to Quebec; we had to return at 9.30, however, as "lights out" sounded at 10.15. Our dress when off duty consisted of kilts, white jacket, gingham, and swagger-stick, or cane; no man was allowed to leave camp unless his uniform was perfectly clean, with buttons and brasswork shining, and spats, belt and sporrans dry and snowy white. The only drawback in camp was the scarcity of water, as most of the time we were forced to use a pond of stagnant water in the rear of the parade ground for washing purposes.

On Tuesday, July 21st, reveille sounded at 6.00 o'clock, breakfast at 6.30, and drill at 7.00. At meal-time we also cleaned our uniforms, and as this occurred three times a day, you may be sure that we used a considerable amount of pipe-clay and brass polish during our stay in camp. We drilled most of that morning on the parade ground, in kilts and white jackets. After dinner, we formed up again and accompanied by all the other regiments in camp, we marched to a large field about a mile distant, suitable for manoeuvring a large body of troops. We wore our review order uniforms, red tunics and busbies, and drilled all afternoon, under command of Brig-Gen. Buchan. After supper, those of us who had not procured passes were not permitted to leave camp. As it was raining we were not greatly disappointed, so we spent the evening quietly in our tents.

On Wednesday, July 22nd, when reveille sounded at 5.00 a. m., it was raining quite heavily, so we spent most of the morning in cleaning our uniforms. Shortly before dinner, however, it stopped raining and the sun came out. We paraded after dinner in review order, for the purpose of lining the streets of Quebec in honor of the Prince of Wales, who was to come ashore that afternoon from the "Indomitable," which had not arrived yet. We marched to the Levis wharf where a ferry steamer was waiting to take us over to Quebec. The Prince's ship and her escort passed us while we were crossing the river. Soon after taking up our position on the street, the Prince of Wales, in full Highland uniform, Admiral Jaurguiberry, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, R. L. Borden, Hon. Mr. Lemieux, and many other noted persons. When these had all passed, we formed up again and marched back to camp. Our pipe band, with the exception of a single piper and a drummer, had accepted the invitation of the pipe band of the 48th Highlanders of Toronto to visit them at their camp at Seward Park, in Quebec city. As on the preceding night, it began to rain shortly after supper, so the majority of the boys stayed in camp.

On Thursday, July 23rd, the bugles invited us to turn out at 4 o'clock a. m. We were to take part in a rehearsal of the Grand Review that morning on the Plains of Abraham, and as we encamped a considerable distance from that place, it was necessary for us to rise somewhat earlier than usual. We wore our drill order uniforms, and on landing at Quebec, we marched directly to the Plains, receiving much applause on the way. We drilled for a few hours and then returned to camp, where we arrived about half-past two in the afternoon. Just at twenty minutes to three, we received orders to parade at three o'clock sharp, in review order. This came as a great surprise to us, for the officers had promised us the afternoon off. As we were then in our drill uniforms, this left us twenty minutes to eat dinner and change and clean our uniforms. However, we got ready and marched to the nearest street of Levis, where six or eight street cars were waiting for us. They carried us to the Levis ferry, which landed us in Quebec with the least possible delay. We marched up to the Mountain Hill Arch, near the post-office, and halted there for a short time. While there, we saw one of the historical processions, in which some very queer costumes were worn. We also saw a crowd of Caughnawaga Indians in war paint and feathers, whose appearance was very striking.

Our grandstand. First came the sailors, French, American and English, in the honor of the Prince, but when we heard that these orders had been issued by mistake, we returned to camp. About half a mile from the ferry landing, a most popular, there is a huge cliff, somewhat larger than Fort Howe at home, which has wooden steps leading up to the top of these steps in twos. Farther on, we passed through a very beautiful and picturesque old French cemetery. We eventually arrived back in camp at seven o'clock short-cut so camp. It was a very beautiful scene, and we were very glad to see our officers and the other officers, thanked us for the excellent showing we had made despite the great amount of unnecessary work caused by wrong orders. The mistake, he said, was neither that of the officers nor of the men. As a means of substantially expressing their thanks the officers served us with extra rations (beer and soft drinks) and granted us leave of absence from camp without passes until 11.30 p. m. We then had supper, after which we prepared for an evening's fun in Quebec. About eight o'clock the Pipe-Band of the 48th Highlanders arrived in camp to return the visit of the previous night made by our musicians. They were given a hearty welcome and entertained by our pipers. By the time those of us who were off duty arrived in Quebec, it was raining again for the third successive night, although not heavily. I was with two of our fellows from the same tent, and we stopped at the wharf for a short time to watch the fireworks at Levis. They were very good, although somewhat spoiled by the rain. The ships of war in the harbor presented a brilliant spectacle, as did also the Dufferin Terrace and Citadel, being very nicely illuminated. There was the usual cosmopolitan crowd in the streets of Quebec; pagans, English, French and American soldiers, Canadian soldiers, Indians, Highlanders and civilians. During the evening we were present at a fireworks display, which was very fine. Having seen all we had time for, we returned to camp.

Friday, July 24th, was undoubtedly the most important day of all, as far as the soldiers were concerned. Reveille sounded at 5.30 a. m., and in review order we set out for Quebec for the last time. Arriving at the Plains, we doubled across the field and took up our allotted position. At last the Prince arrived, accompanied by Lord Roberts and other officers, and inspected the troops. There were over 10,000 Canadian soldiers, consisting of cavalry, artillery and infantry, also over 10,000 sailors. The massed bands of all the regiments, stationed in the centre of the front of the line, played "O Canada." After the inspection, the troops marched past the Prince. The bands remained where they were, and each band, after playing the "March Past" for its own regiment, would drop to the rear and rejoin it. The Prince and his staff occupied a position in front of the centre of the
