your tongue swells enormously; so much so that you will be almost unable to swallow. Melted butter is the best remedy for poisoning by this plant.

The most dangerous of all common hedgerow plants is the acorn or monkey's hood, which has palm-shaped leaves. A very small dose causes a strange tingling all over the body, and partial blindness. A little more and death is cer-tain.

These are all plants which are more or less attractive to the eye. There are others which seem to advertise them-selves as dangerous. The hemlock, for instance. If you pinch a leaf it gives out a nasty, mousey odor. One need hardly state that it is very poisonous, and remedies are not at hand, ends in death.

All the nightshades have a sinister ap-pearance and should be avoided alto-gether. There are also many common shrubs of which the leaves, if eaten, pro-duce unpleasant results. Among these are the common privet, the elder, holly and laburnum.

Plane-tree leaves will cause in some people an illness resembling a bad at-tack of hay fever, and this not through chewing, but merely handling them.

The eyes become red and swollen, while nose and throat are sore and inflamed.

Quite a number of plants are pos-sessed of short hairs on their stems or leaves, which will cause a rash to break out upon sensitive skins. One such is the Primula obconica, which is one of the commonest pot plants in greenhouse or on window sill.

Bulbs of the Roman hyacinth are covered with a sort of light scale, which comes off on the hands and sets up an unpleasant irritation, which sometimes spreads up the arms.

Many who work in conservatories or glass houses often find that hyacinth cause severe eye trouble. The idea is that the pollen is the irritating cause. Boy's Life.

"Just one more question, Uncle."

"Well, well, what is it?"

"If a boy is a lad and has a step-father, is the lad a steppladder?"
