ST. JOHN STAR.

ST. JOHN, N. B., SEPT. 17, 1901.

THEY ARE WELCOME.

The welcome extended to the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York at Quebec yesterday was but the expression of the feelings of the whole Canadian people. Everywhere the royal pair will be received with open arms, for their own sake, for the sake of their father the King, and also because they represent in a sense the whole of the great empire of which Canada is proud to form a part.

As was remarked by the Star yesterday, any action the Duke may take this week out of consideration for the people of the United States, who mourn the death of their foremost citizen, will be endorsed by the people of Canada, whether it interferes with some of the pre-conceived arrangements or not. His royal highness not only represents Canada, but in a larger sense the empire, in that regard, and his official action will be endorsed by the people.

TOO OPTIMISTIC.

The despatches indicate that the physicians who attended the late President McKinley are now much less harmonious than when they were giving out optimistic reports regarding his condition. Dr. McBurney appears to be charged, by the others with being the chief offender in this respect, but readers of the despatches remember that all of them spoke very hopefully. It is worth noting that the British Medical Journal, assuming from the cable reports that the president would recover, made this remark: "The treatment of the case in its promptitude and complete efficiency will rank as one of the greatest achievements yet recorded in abdominal surgery."

The Lancet said that President McKinley's life was saved under Providence by excellent surgery. The German Medical Weekly, declining to accept the reports as correct, made the following comment upon them:—

"The buoyant hopefulness of the Buffalo bulletins baffles scientific comprehension. If Mr. McKinley had not earned a name in history through his political greatness, his recovery from the wounds under which he is now suffering would have earned him undying fame in the annals of physical science. The diagnosis called to Europe compelled a dispassionate realization that the injuries were assigned to be fatal. Recovery from bullet wounds in the abdominal region are so excessively rare that modern surgery never reckons on the possibility of exceptions. Peritonitis always occurs through the holes torn by bullets, and the intestinal bacilli permeating the fluids released carry the elements of death when vital parts of the organism like the stomach are affected."

BRITISH LUMBER MARKET.

The Liverpool correspondent of the Timber Trades Journal of Sept. 6th says that the consumption of all kinds of deals and boards in August was 4,570 standards greater than the import. Of spruce he says:—
"The import into Liverpool during August was 15,890 standards, just about one-half of what it was last year, and as we have just said, with a good demand existing, the consumption for the month is put down at 13,950 standards, which thus pulled the stock down to 25,594 standards, and in 1899 it stood at 25,594 standards. The position of spruce is thus made plain for this autumn in prices, to which we have from time to time referred in these columns."

The Belfast correspondent says:—
"There is nothing which calls for particular comment in the way of trade, which, on the whole, seems a little better. Prices locally maintain their level fairly well, although here and there some across some very cut quotations. The most satisfactory article at the present time is spruce, prices for which may be high."

A WESTERN VIEW.

A writer in the Ottawa Journal, describing the recent visit of the upper province newspaper men to these provinces, makes these remarks about what he saw:—
"The trip is one decidedly worth while taking. Probably a trip to Europe would not discover a great many more surprises and novelties to an Ontario person than a visit to the provinces down by the sea. It is a country modelled on old country lines. The 'strenuous life' of the west seems almost an unknown quantity. There is an air of satisfaction and contentment one never sees in the west. In many places, even in the west, there is much that differs from this part of Canada. For recreation, rest, amusement, information—for 'a complete change'—one has but to go to the east end of our own country."

The South African soldiers may be permitted after all to wear their khaki uniforms when they receive their war medals. A delegation called on Hon. Dr. Borden on Friday afternoon, and he promised to give the matter very careful consideration.

The Ottawa lumbermen will erect an arch in honor of the royal visitors. It is proposed to have the arch constructed of saw logs, deal and lumber, and to put it up without using a nail.

THE LIBERAL TARIFF.

Analyzing the Canadian trade returns the Ottawa Journal figures out that the liberal tariff is 27.1 per cent, and that "as the tariff preference to Britain must materially reduce the average of duty paid, the probability is strong that outside of the British preference, our tariff is practically higher than it ever was before."

THE ROYAL VISIT.

A meeting of the executive committee was held at the City Hall last night. In the absence of Mayor Daniel, Richard O'Brien was called to the chair, and there was a full attendance of the members.

It was decided to accept A. J. Charlton's designs for the arch at the corner of Mill and Pond streets and at the corner of Broad and Carmarthen streets. These arches will be built by the committee.

The arch on Mill street will be a large one, spanning the street, with heavy columns on each side. Flags will be displayed wherever they can be placed. On the top of this will be a figure of Neptune and other deities.

The Broad street arch will be built with a flat top, with smaller arches over the sidewalks. On the top will be shown the Goddess of Plenty with other decorations.

Both arches will be illuminated. On one of them will be exhibited the following inscription: "The city by the sea welcomes its royal visitors."

R. O'Brien, Ald. Baxter and Judge Ritchie were appointed to look after the inscriptions and matters in connection with the arches.

Capt. Clark of the salvage corps, Major Sturdee and Ald. Seaton were chosen to look after the bands of music.

After the executive adjourned, the committee on fireworks had a meeting. They will order $750 worth of fireworks from Hands and will put on a display in the harbor.

The finance and accounts committee of the municipal council met yesterday afternoon to take steps to have the court house decorated on the occasion of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of York and Cornwall (next month). The matter was fully discussed, and Warden White, Councilors Christie and McMillin, and Secretary Vincent were appointed to call for tenders for the decoration of the court house building.

Senator Kirchhoff's survey at Grand Bay, where his royal highness is to enjoy a day's shooting, has begun, and it is expected it will be finished by the end of next week. A. E. Stevens of Port Hope, who has the contract, has sent out all the lumber as well as the plans to the carpenters there. The building will be 12x18 feet, with a 9 foot wall and a cottage roof. A large verandah will cover the front of the house, which will probably be painted red.

MRS. MCKINLEY.

Rathetic Story of Her Suffering and Devotion.

She Would Not Break Down—The Last Farewell Scenes.

The devotion of Mrs. McKinley to her husband during the week of suffering and anxiety has been frequently remarked. She has not willingly left the president's side from the first moment she reached him after he was shot down. Only the precautionary policy of the physicians has kept her out of the bedroom, where she wanted to minister to him and until the night of the 14th, when she was allowed to attend to him at his bedside, she kept her guard at his door.

Mrs. McKinley was not with the president when he was shot. She did not know anything about the attempt at assassination until three hours had elapsed. A thousand minute precautions were taken to shield her from the terrible news, until the knowledge would not stir her, and until the night of the president, with his wounds dressed, would not be too great a shock to be borne.

While these barriers were being thrown up to protect her, Mrs. McKinley was at the millinery house, restless and harassed by fears. The president was late. He had been expected one hour—two hours earlier. Where was he? Had anything happened?

Mrs. McKinley did not suspect assassination, but she dreaded that some accident had befallen the president in the throngs at the exposition.

Finally the horrible news could be withheld no longer. She must be told for the president was even then being borne to the house.

EQUAL TO THE TRIAL.

But those who feared for the woman who had just passed through a severe crisis, in which she, too, had looked death in the face, were mistaken. She was equal to the trial. The things fell upon her heart like a blow. She staggered, but was calm, and at once stepped forward to her post of suffering.

A few weeks before, Mrs. McKinley had watched over her. It was her time now. She knew that the real anguish is for the loved one who sits in sorrowful vigil.

She took her stand at the door, as near as the physicians would allow her to approach. "A room just across the hall was assigned to her. There she sat watching the opposite door, listening to every sound, striving to catch the slightest whisper that might come from the edge of her husband. When tired sitting, or restless under the stirring of anxiety, she would slowly pick up the floor, like a Roman sentinel, with eyes resting upon the door across the hall.

AT THE BEDSIDE.

Now and then the physicians would permit her to the bedside, where a few whispered words were interchanged, almost as lovers' first confidences. Then she would stand with her hand tenderly clasping her husband's hand, and a smile upon her face, in which there was no shadow of sorrow or grief. And so, night after night, day after day, her vigil never ceased. She stood guard over the President with that firmness and devotion to duty that would have passed from the world after the fall of Rome if woman had not handed down the sacred spirit.

The effect of Mrs. McKinley's devotion to the president was all for the best. He fretted when she was not permitted to come into his room. The physicians soon saw that it would be best for both that she should see the president at least once a day. On the occasion of her first visit to his bedside, the president clasped her hand warmly and said, as steadily as he could:—

"This is not the worst fight we have had."

"No, indeed," she said, and they exchanged smiles of good cheer and good comradeship that meant a strong fight and a triumphant fight against death.

NOTHING WAS HIDDEN.

So brave did Mrs. McKinley show herself that his condition was fully disclosed to her. There was no attempt to hide anything from her. She was told of every change in his condition, and knew immediately what the doctors had done or proposed to do. It proved her so, for she was thus enabled to match her strength of will against the great sorrow she had to endure.

Of her devotion, Col. Wilbur C. Brown has given a remarkable description.

"It is unspeakably touching," he said, "to see her, who is so weak, try to nerve herself for meeting her husband without breaking down. She has been told that his very life may depend upon her bravery, because his constant and greatest anxiety is for her. I have seen her just before the door of the sickroom was opened and she came to meet her husband, and she was so calm and so brave that she could control herself as though she were going to break completely down. She clenched her teeth, however, and with her handkerchief pressed to her lips, which were quite white with emotion, she said out to herself: 'Oh, I mustn't. I mustn't. I won't.' And she did not, the brave little woman. She got herself all together again, and when she went into the room she was outwardly nothing but quietness and sweetness itself."

It is impossible for those who do not know the marvelous tenderness there is between this husband and wife to understand what the suffering of each is to the other. Mrs. McKinley is not under the influence of any narcotic drugs whatever. She is bearing up under all this by her own strength of will and by her own strength of heart.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

Mrs. McKinley was admitted into the room a little after 6. She remained there for an hour and a half. During that time she held almost silent communion with her husband.

The president greeted her with a sweet smile of resignation and happiness. Then he clasped her hand, and the two comrades took their last sight of each other in life. Mr. McKinley talked as much as he was able, and his tone was cheerful, although scarcely audible. Bravely the suffering woman, herself not yet recovered from her late illness, bore this severest stress of the ordeal. The burden seemed too great to be sustained, but she was nerved to the task. To those who saw her, her courage seemed almost superhuman. All her spirit rose to the supreme test and supported her as on wings.
