PHYSICIAN GIVES ADVICE

Tells Why So Many Suffer from Catarrh and Rheumatism.

A distinguished physician, famous for his successful treatment of catarrh and rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles, states as follows:—
"Our climate being more or less damp and changeable, is bad for catarrh and rheumatism, and care must be taken not to let these troubles gain headway. In addition, he states that a great many Canadians are careless in their habits, and to this as much as climatic conditions is due a great deal of the trouble. Inefficient clothing and improper eating will cause rheumatic and catarrhal troubles in any climate."

This eminent authority gives the following as the simplest and best treatment known to science, and to it he gives credit largely for his success: Fluid Extract Cascara, ½ oz.; Fluid Extract Cassia Compound, 1 oz.; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, 6 oz. Directions: One teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

The ingredients are all vegetable, and have a direct and specific action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, eliminating all poisonous matter from the system. Any druggist can dispense this, or you can buy the ingredients separately and mix at home by shaking in a bottle. Many of our readers should benefit by this article. Save the receipt.

Riches

I should as soon think of going in to my barnyard and saying: "O, Alderneys, be careful about giving too much milk," as I should think of saying to men, "Avoid getting rich. I do not care how much milk my cows have. If it is good, rich milk, the more there is of it the better I like it. I have never exhorted men not to seek wealth; but I have said to men, 'Riches alone do not make manhood nor produce happiness. A man may be rich and be a fool. A man may be miserable.'—H. W.

The Girl Who Wouldn't Marry

In one of the mills in Fall River I met a girl whose marriage created some excitement because of the bitter opposition it met with on the part of her mother. Observe that in New England mill towns the father and mother work in the mills until the oldest child, or more commonly, until two children are old enough to work. Then one parent, usually the father, I observe, leaves the mill forever. The other parent leaves as soon as the combined wages of the children amount to a living income. The mother assuming her rightful function of housekeeper and housekeeper, the family enjoys a degree of comfort and prosperity they never knew before. They live in a decent house, eat good food, and have some pleasures of existence.

The mother of this girl in Fall River, Lillie, was aroused to a perfect frenzy of apprehension as soon as Lillie began to "keep company" with a good-looking young French Canadian teamster. She forbade him the house, she watched the girl to prevent her meeting him outside, she did all she could to break up the affair. Finally she told Lillie that if she dared to marry without her consent, she would have Lillie arrested! declares Rheta Childs Dorr, in "The Wreck of the Home," a remarkable sociological study in the November issue of Hampton's Broadway Magazine.

Now Lillie, who was a weaver and earned ten dollars a week followed the universal custom of carrying her pay envelope unopened to her mother. She received a trifle back for pocket money, but she was unaccustomed to independence, and she trembled under her mother's threat. The teamster's arguments and pleadings finally prevailed and they eloped, although she believed that her disobedience was criminal. When she found that marriage was allowed even to working girls, and against the will of parents, her joy was amazing. I never saw a happier bride. She continued to work in the mill, of course, for the teamster's wages were only seven dollars a week, which is not enough to live on. Seven dollars and ten dollars are seventeen dollars—a fortune to a girl who had never had so much as a dollar at a time to spend. Life, for the present became a brilliant thing. The teamster not only permitted Lillie to keep her own envelope, but gave her his, and went with her to market to teach her how to spend. "William," said Lillie with pride, "has ideas. He intends to live like people ought to."

Yet this beautiful resolve can only be realized in the rare event of their having no children. When the children come William's wages will be smaller than ever, nor will Lillie's ten dollars look quite so large. Thus it will be that during the time their children are small and need nourishing food, there will be little money to provide it. Worse, much worse, there will be no mother at home to cook the food and care for the children. In Fall River, old women, broken-down mill hands, plus soothing sirup, take care of the babies. Lillie will bury a third of her children. When the surviving ones are well grown she will leave the mills and realize once more, in her old age, a little of the comfort and happiness she knew in her bridehood—until her children begin to marry.—Ex.

Which Liniment is Best?

For muscular pains and aches a thick, oily preparation can't penetrate—that's why Nerviline beats them all—it sinks right in. "I wouldn't live without Nerviline in my house," writes J. B. Cottam of Mastown, N. S. "If you have rheumatism or soreness in the muscles or in fact any need of an honest liniment, Nerviline fills the bill. I can recommend it highly because I have proved that in one application of Polson's Nerviline there is more virtue than in a whole bottle of ordinary liniment." Try one of the large 25c. bottles.

The Reason Why

"Now, Peters," said the teacher, "what is it that makes the water of the sea so salty?" "Salt," said Peters. "Next?" said the teacher. "What is it that makes the water of the sea so salty?" "The salty quality of the sea water," answered Peters. "Next?" "It is due to the admixture of a sufficient quantity of chloride of sodium to impart to the aqueous fluid with which it commingles a saline flavor, which is readily recognized by the organs of taste!" "Right," said the teacher. "Go up one!"

The Dangers That Lurk in "Soft" Drinks

According to a writer in the London Lancet, there is hardly less danger to body and mind in so-called "soft" drinks than in those which are unblushingly alcoholic. This gentleman declares with considerable vehemence that if one wishes wholly to avoid the demon of alcohol it is necessary to eschew not only lemonade and ginger ale, but even more water than is absolutely requisite for quenching the thirst, since, in the purest of water, there is a small percentage of natural alcohol. This reformer agrees with the celebrated French satirist that "the only superiority ordinary drinking men show over the animals lies in their ability to drink when they are not thirsty." He opines that many of the dyspeptic and heart evils of the day arise from drinking more than is required to quench the natural thirst. To indulge in tea or coffee drinking, or in seltzer or ginger ale or lemonade drinks, in order to quench an unnatural or educated thirst, is to confess oneself in the same category as drug takers and dram drunkards.

Much of the artificial-drink abuse of our time is due, says the writer in the Lancet, to the idea that municipal water is mostly tainted, and that it thus accounts largely for the death-rate. He points out that the best and purest waters of the natural spring are not free from a certain taint, and that the evils of tannin, alcohol, carbonic-acid gas, glucosid and ginger are far more to be apprehended than the impurities of ordinary water, since the human body is not without its own natural poisons and impurities and their natural antidotes. Lemonade which is so freely recommended as a refreshing and stimulating drink to reforming toppers, is, says this physician, a pregnant source of gastric trouble. At first the harm is not noticed; gradually, however, when the citric acid has had its play upon the coating of the stomach, dyspeptic gases begin to form, the eating of a meal becomes a source of apprehension as regards after-effects, and bilious trouble makes its entry. Ginger ale is hardly less harmful; in time the ginger corrodes the coating of the stomach, the same being the case with seltzer waters and ever-infused tea.

For a home to be a home in the highest sense of the word, and not merely a place to sleep and eat, each member of the family must contribute his or her share. There must be forbearance, sympathy and love. A great deal depends on the parents. They should in the early childhood of their children teach them to make the home the dearest place on earth. The aged live more in the past than the present. Their reveries are principally of their boyhood and girlhood. How necessary then that these days be made happy, that their reveries may give them pleasure. It is not a perfect home where the inmates hold themselves aloft. It is where the guest is ever welcome, where friends delight to come and come again. Those that shut themselves from the world become selfish and narrow minded. It requires interchange of thought to expand the mind. And what is more delightful than the happy interchange of thought between friends in a happy home.

A national fund is being raised in Siam to commemorate the King's reign of 41 years, the longest reign in the history of the country. The fund will be devoted to the erection of a statue to the King, and any surplus remaining will be handed over to His Majesty to be expended for public purposes. The Crown Prince is acting as president of the committee of the fund.
