HEALTH OR SICKNESS!
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

The blood furnishes the material of every bone, muscle, gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure, it secures health to every organ it necessarily produces disease. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS operate directly upon the elements of the stream of life, neutralizing the principle of disease, and thus radically curing the malady, whether located in the nerves, the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the muscles, the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race and in disorders peculiar to certain climates and localities.

ALARMING DISORDERS.

Dyspepsia, and derangement of the liver, the source of infirmity and suffering, and the cause of innumerable deaths, yield to these curatives, in all cases, however aggravated, acting as a mild purgative. alternative and tonic; they relieve the bowels, purify the fluids, and invigorate the system and the constitution at the same time.

GENERAL WEAKNESS—NERVOUS COMPLAINTS.

When all stimulants fail, the renovating and bracing properties of these Pills give firmness to the shaking nerves and enfeebled muscles of the victim of general debility.

DELICATE FEMALES.

All irregularities and ailments incident to the delicate and sensitive organs of the sex are removed or prevented by a few doses of these mild, but infallible alteratives. No mother who regards her own or her children's health should fail to have them within her reach.

SCIENTIFIC ENDORSEMENTS.

The London "Lancet," the London "Medical Review," and the most eminent of the faculty in Great Britain, France and Germany, have eulogized the Pills and their inventor.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma	Female Complaints	Piles
Bowel Complaints		Stone and Gravel
Coughs	Headaches
Colds	Indigestion	Secondary Symptoms
Chest Diseases	Influenza
Costiveness	Inflammation	Venereal Affections
Dyspepsia	Inward Weakness
Diarrhoea		Worms, of all kinds.
Dropsy	Liver Complaints
Debility
Fever and Ague	Lowness of spirits

THE GREAT NAPOLEON'S OPINION OF POPERY, &c.

At Breda, it is said, a conspiracy against Bonaparte was discovered. It seems to have been fomented by the Roman Catholic priests, for Bonaparte shewed himself ill-affected towards Roman Catholicism in general, and to the priests of Brabant in particular. When the Roman Catholic Clergy in Breda were admitted to an audience with Napoleon, during his tour, they were not in their canonicals like the Protestant clergy. Bonaparte turned to them angrily:—"You say you are priests," he exclaimed, "Why have you not your cassocks on?—What are you? Attornies, notaries, peasants! I come into a province where the majority are Roman Catholics, who in former times were oppressed, who acquired more liberty after the revolution, and upon whom the King, my brother, bestowed many favors. I come in order to make you equal to the rest, and you begin by forgetting the respect due to me, and complain of the oppressions that you suffered under the former Government: your conduct shows how well you deserve them. The first act of sovereignty which I was obliged to exercise was that of arresting two of your contumacious priests," addressing the Apostolic Vicar; they are in prison and shall continue there. On the other hand, he exclaimed, "the first word I hear from a priest of the Reformed Church is, that it is his doctrine to render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's. This is the doctrine you ought to preach, and from that gentleman "said he, pointing to the spokesman of the Reformed deputation, you ought to learn it. You have calumniated the Protestants' he continued, 'by representing them as preaching doctrines dangerous to the State; but the best subjects I have are Protestants. In Paris I am partly attended by them; they have free access to me; and here a handful of Brabant fanatics attempt to resist my designs. Had I not met in Bossuel, and in the maxims of the Gallican Church, with principles that agree with mine, and had not the Concordat been received, I should have become a Protestant myself, and 30,000,000 of people would have followed my example. But what religion do you teach? Do you know that Christ said, 'My kingdom is not of this world,' and would you interfere in my concerns? You will not pray for a sovereign; you want to be obstinate citizens. I have proofs of it in my pocket. If you maintain such principles, your lot will be punishment in this world, and eternal condemnation in the next. 'You,' said he turning to the chief of the deputation, 'you are the Apostolic Vicar. Who appointed you to that office? The Pope. He has no right to do it.'—Then addressing them again collectively, 'You will not pray for the Sovereign—perhaps because a Romish priest excommunicated me; but who gave him the right of excommunicating a sovereign? Why did Luther and Calvin separate themselves from the Church? Your infamous sales of indulgences caused them to revolt, and the German Princes would no longer bear your sway. The English acted wisely in renouncing you. The Popes, by their heirarchy, set Europe in flames. Perhaps it is your wish to re-establish scaffolds and racks; but it shall be my care that you do not succeed. Are you of the religion of Gregory VII., Boniface VIII., Benedict XIV., or of Clement XII? I am not. I am of the religion of Jesus Christ, who said 'Give unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's;' and, conformably to the same Gospel, I give unto God the things that are God's. I bear the temporal sword—I know how to wield it. God placed me on the throne, and you, reptiles of the earth, dare not oppose me. I owe no account of my administration to the Pope—only to God and Jesus Christ. You, perhaps, think me created to kiss the Pope's slipper. If I depended on you, you would cut off my hair, put on me a cowl, place me in a convent, or, like Louis the Pius, banish me to Africa. What ignorant idiots you are! Prove to me out of the Gospel that Jesus Christ has appointed the Pope his substitute, or successor of St. Peter, and that he has the right to excommunicate a sovereign. If you care about my protection, then preach the Gospel as the Apostles did. I will protect you if you are good citizens; if not, I will banish you from my empire, and will disperse you over the world like Jews." He then ordered the Prefect to make the necessary preparations that these people might swear to the concordat, and bade him attend to the seminary at Breda, and take care that the orthodox Gospel was preached there, in order that it might send forth more enlightened men than these idiots, as he called them.—History of the Consulate and Empire by M. Thiers.

A Lawyer's Question Answered.—"What did he say? Come, give us his very words—none of your inferences, sir!" "I don't like to answer that question." "Ho, ho! So you are afraid to answer that question, are you? I knew I should drive you into a close corner. Come out with it, and none of your shirking here." "I should rather be excused." "Then I shall appeal to the court to commit you for contempt." "Well, sir, he told me this morning that he had no money." Why, sir, what language did he use?" "Why, I asked him to lend me half a dollar, and he said he could'nt, for you had robbed him of every cent of his money, and if he did'nt get out of your clutches very soon, his children would starve."

A retired baker, whose dough has nearly run out, and who feels that his practices in this world entitle him to a warm berth in the sulphureous oven in the next, would strive to make amends for his past life, and purposes to do so by telling his brother kneaders of the dough of prosperity how they can grow rich without reducing their loaves to the size of walnuts, and the puffing them up to the dimensions of cocoa-nuts by means of saleratus and other inflating devices. Make large bread, and let it be of good sweet flour, and your customers will increase and multiply so rapidly that you will get your merited reward in the smiles of fortune and the approbation of your fellow men. Try the advice of a retired baker, and, his word for it, you will then decide that it is "as good as wheat."

NAPOLEON AND THE WOODMAN.

As Napoleon was riding out attended by some officers, I was of the party; we rode by the place where some woodmen were cutting timber, and observed one of them singing; the Emperor turned round to us and said:

"Observe that man, who, though toiling hard for his daily bread, seems to be quite happy.'

The woodman, observing so many persons looking at him, made a respectful bow and approached us to inquire if we had lost our way.

'No,' said the Emperor; 'but tell me, my honest man, what makes you so cheerful? What may you earn a day?'

'Three francs, your honor.'

'Three francs!' said the Emperor.

'Does that support you and your family? Tell me, how do you manage to do so?'

'With pleasure, your honor, if you will step a little this way. With three francs I not only keep my wife and family, but I also put money out at interest, and pay off my old debts.'

'Explain yourself?'

'Willingly, your honor. I keep my wife and four children; I place money out at interest by educating the latter at school; and pay off my old debts by maintaining my aged father and mother. So you see, your honor, I may well be happy.'

'Excellent man,' said Napoleon, here is a Napoleon for you,' tossing him the money. 'Keep what you have now told me a secret. I am your Emperor, and on pain of displeasure, I enjoin you to tell no one till you have seen my face at least a hundred times.'

'Sir, it shall be so.'

'Napoleon turned his horse's head and rejoined.

The same evening, as he appeared thoughtful, General Rasp asked him if anything unpleasant had occurred that day.

'No,' said the Emperor, 'but I met a man this morning, who, with three francs per day, told me he kept his family, placed money out at interest, and paid off his old debts. Gentlemen,' continued the Emperor, 'you will please me much if any of you can tell me the meaning of what he said.'

All of us were very anxious to please our monarch, and knowing that he had spoken to a woodman in the forenoon, we rode off on the following morning, and having found the woodman, asked him if he knew to whom he had spoken on the previous day.

'The man said 'yes, I had the honor of talking with the Emperor.'

'What did you say to him?'

'Excuse me, gentlemen, that I must not tell you

'One of the party said, 'I will give you fifty Napoleons to tell me.'

The man said, 'No, I dare not.'

'You shall have one hundred if you will oblige us,' rejoined our companion.

The woodman, after pausing a minute or two, said:

'Place the money in my hand, and I will tell you.'

We placed it in his hand, and after he had carefully examined every piece, he told us all that had transpired.

We rode off, and on our arrival at the palace were admitted to the Emperor, when we expounded his riddle.

Napoleon, pale with anger, said:

'Bring the woodman before me, dead or alive!'

He was soon found, and ushered into the presence of his angry monarch.

'Sirrah, how have you dared to break your promise with me?'

'Sire,' said the woodman with great composure 'I have not disobeyed your commands.'

'How slave?' said Napoleon, 'dare you tell me a lie?'

Sire, said the woodman, 'you told me I should tell no one until I had seen your face one hundred times.' Then putting his hands deliberately into his pockets, he laid the pieces of money deliberately before the Emperor, with the head upwards. 'There, Sire,' continued he, 'have I not seen your face one hundred times?'

Napoleon burst into a loud fit of laughter, gave him a slap in the face, called him a clever fellow, made him a captain in the artillery, where he proved himself deserving of his good fortune.

A Story of a Jack-Knife.—There is a moral in the following story, taken from the Boston Ledger. How rarely does it happen—does it ever happen—that any amount of wealth a man may have acquired, might not be measured by the amount of virtuous effort that he expended in acquiring it. Was a sudden fortune ever a good fortune?

"In 1786, a youth, then residing in Maine, owned a jack-knife, which he, being of a somewhat trading disposition, sold for a gallon of West India rum. This he retailed, and with the proceeds purchased two gallons, and eventually a barrel, which was followed in due time with a large stock. In a word, he got rich, and became the Squire of the district, through the possession and sale of the jack-knife, and an indomitable trading industry. He died worth property in real estate and money amounting to $80,000.—This was divided by testament among four children—three boys and a girl. Luck, which seemed to have been the guardian angel of the father, deserted the children; for every folly and extravagance they could engage in, seemed to occupy their exclusive attention and cultivation. The daughter married unfortunately, and her patrimony was soon thrown away by her spendthrift of a husband. The sons were no more fortunate, and two of them died of dissipation and in poverty. The daughter also died. The last of the family, for many years past, has lived on the kindness of those who knew him in days of prosperity, as pride would not allow him to go to the poor-farm. A few days ago he died, suddenly and unattended, in a barn where he had laid himself down to take a drunken sleep. On his pockets being examined, all that was found in them was a small piece of string and a jack-knife. So the fortune that began with the implement of that kind, left its simple duplicate. We leave the moral to be drawn in whatever fashion it may suggest itself to the reader, simply stating that the story is a true one, and all the facts well known to many whom this relation will doubtless reach."

A country youth came to town to see his intended wife, and for a long time, could think of nothing to say. At last a great snow falling, he took occasion to say, that his father's sheep would be all undone. 'Well said,' she, taking him by the hand, I'll keep one of them.

George, you are looking very smiling, what has happened?—the most delightful thing! I caught my Jenny by surprise, this morning, in her wrapper, and without hoops; and I got the first kiss I've had since whalebone skirts came into fashion.'

The Chronicle.

LONDON, March 5, 1858.

Undaunted by the rebuffs met with in some quarters during his adventures in search of a Ministry, Lord Derby now starts with one fairly constituted. His own son, after at first refusing, and then unwillingly consenting is installed at the Colonial Office. This is a very fair beginning of official life; it is not everybody who starts as Secretary of State. But then everybody acknowledges that Lord Stanley is not a mere lordling, with the adventure of good connexions and nothing more. He is felt to be a young nobleman whose abilities would distinguish any station, and public sympathy therefore goes entirely with him in his new office. General Peel, who replaces Lord Panmure as War Minister, is also an untried man. No! we are wrong! He has lately drawn up a new set of rules and regulations for the conduct of horse-racing, and betting, and no doubt can be entertained of his qualification for his post. The Earl of Ellenborough is not an untried man. Did he not carry away the gates of Somnauth? Did he not quarrel mortally with the Directors of the East India Company? Nature and Lord Derby, therefore seem to have marked him out for the Presidency of the Board of Control. In like manner Sir John Pakington having some experience of the Colonial Office, where he acquitted himself respectably, is naturally not put there again, but pitchforked into the Admiralty, of which he knows nothing. Poor fellow! he will be awfully seasick when he, the First Lord, guardian of our navy, makes his tour of inspection to the out-ports in the Admiralty tender.

On Monday the new Premier made his bow in that capacity before the Senate and a host of admiring strangers, amongst whom was the ex-Premier, Mr. Dallas, French attaches, and fair ladies out of Court. With rare eloquence Lord Derby expounded his views on things in general, and for an hour and a half held his audience enraptured, amidst the sustained cheers of his supporters and compliments extorted even from his political opponents. Of course the chief interest attached to his statement about the Conspiracy Bill and French alliance. What will he do? He will do what everybody said he would. His trusty foreign Secretary, the Earl of Malmesbury, will first apply the powers of his gigantic intellect inditing a fitting answer to the Walewski despatch. When the punctuation and spelling of this have been corrected by the clerks, and its grammatical construction improved by the Premier, the government will wait. Lord Derby is sanguine of receiving from Count Walowski an explanation which will remove all ground of irritation on the part of the English nation. Then he will ask Parliament to examine the law, which simply means that he will introduce an improved version of the late Conspiracy Bill. What will happen if Count Walewski should prove "awkward" and say, "We shall give no explanation, and be hanged to you!" Lord Derby does not say. This is an unpleasant contingency, not for the world to be dwelt on.—As to other subjects the new premier took a hopeful, practical view, trying as much as possible to make his hearers forget the opinions he expressed in opposition. He will make the best of the Chinese war. He thinks he sees daylight about India. He does't mind an Indian Bill in the least, because the House of Commons has said it wishes for one, and he would not for the world oppose the House of Commons. He is delighted at the condition of the army at home, notwithstanding the drain made upon it by the mutiny. He compliments the Earl of Clarendon, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Panmure. And what about Reform? Why even this is not a matter of indifference to him. If a grateful country and an obedient House of Commons will only keep him in office until 1859, he will signalize that year of grace by a Derbyite Reform Bill. Shall we ever live to see it?

This will be a very broken session. The members have a fortnight's holiday to enable the government to prepare for the coming campaign; another fortnight will bring them up to Easter, when they must of course take holidays again.—All this is in Lord Derby's favor. It gives him time, and secures his position. Then again if anything untoward should happen he has the power, and we are assured will use it, of appealing to the country, with the use of a liberal programme, against the liberals themselves. This appeal the liberals do not desire to press on, and therefore we prognosticate that, in the event of Lord Derby's fulfilling his promises, and remembering his own declaration that a Conservative government was not a stationary one, but progressive, he may hold the reins of power for a longer period than he did with the same coadjutors on a recent occasion.

Lord Clanricarde has given notice that he will justify himself before the House of Lords immediately upon its meeting again. It has been a fashion of late to hound his lordship down on a fancied charge of immorality in the Handcock case. The Times found itself one fine morning extremely moral, and taking up the wild exparte statement of an imaginative Irish counsel, and treating his flights of fancy as Gospel truths, declared that Lord Clanricarde was something near a disgrace to the peerage. This journal has since that given the amende honorable in the shape of a little "faint praise," but never done his lordship justice. It is well known, and certainly everywhere admitted in private society, that Lord Clanricarde is quite innocent of the charges supposed to be brought against him. His character has been whispered away with the foul breath of slander. He shows us the damning influence of accusation. However innocent a man may be, however well and clearly he may establish his innocence to the satisfaction of the most intelligent of juries, let him only be charged with offences, and he will never lose the taint cast upon him.

On the day before the termination of the British Bank trial, the Opera House conspirators in Paris were condemned to death, with the exception of the servant, Gomez, who, presumed to be acting under superior orders, only forfeits his liberty, and not his life. There was no room to doubt the guilt of the accused. Indeed, Orsini boldly proclaimed it, while the others sought to shelter themselves more or less under the plea that they were mere secondary agents. Orsini has presented a memorial to the Emperor, in which, not deigning to sue for his life, he asks Louis Napoleon to befriend his unfortunate country, and rescue Italian liberty from Austrian thraldom.
