A MIXED MENU.

It was a charming little sitting room in which Mrs. Mason sat sewing dainty stitch-Before her stood the servant girl who, with a stolid stare, announced that she had found a place down town.

'But, Mary, you surely would not leave me without help,' Mrs. Mason answered I got a place where I get tree dollar.'

'I would give you three dollars, but you agreed to work for me for two and a half

if I would teach you to talk and do the ossible, Christina

'I got anoder place down town I say I go next week.' Entreaty and persuasion were alike in

ain. It all ended with, 'I go next week.' * *

One year from this time Mrs. Mason was a wiser, if not better, woman, and when Lena announced, 'I got another place down town,' she merely answered, 'very well,' for this was the third girl that she had trained for the woman down town. When Mr. Mason came home to dinner that night he saw at once that some shadow had clouded the domestic heaven, but when his wife had poured out her tale of woe, she caught her idea he laughed long and loud. 'You're a mighty smart little woman, Marie, but if you try that game you'll fall down,' he announced, when she asked for his opinion of her plans.

'I'll not fall down any harder than I have in my other plans, and I believe I can do

'All right. I'll back you,' he promised Accouragingly. Assured of her husband's co-operation

Mrs. Mason very willingly agreed to take Lena's coasin, Christina, who had just arrived from the fatherland. In the week which intervened before the advent of the nestic one might have supposed Mrs. Mason to be a blue-stocking of the deepest dye, for she carried a pencil stuck in her hair, and stopped to jot down burnsented. ing thoughts on whatever was most conve nient to rest her notebook upon; the baby's back or the bottom of the dishpan were alike available. When the new Christing appeared, fresh and rosy and clean, she tarted at her task with vigor. Her former experience taught her the best method of encouraged Christina to repeat it until she town.'-[By Charlotte W. Eastman.

nickly as possible. Mr. Bender take the early train. We generally want toast, but we will get along without it this morning; and we like it rare,' she added, pointing to the beef steak. 'Rare!' Christina ex 1 im d.

'Yes, rare You understand what that is. don't you?'

'Y.e.s.' 'Well, we always take it ; ra, and our offee strong.

'You take coffee for breakfast?' 'Always; and we would like it as soon as

Mrs. Bender sailed out of the kitchen and onfidentially told Mr. Bander that the new girl scemed exceedingly stupid, or else she had a very pecultar manner.

'She is in a constant state of surprise.' she added, 'and I declare, I smell bread toasting I told her not to toast it this morning.

In an incredibly short time the breakfast bell rang, and when the Bender family sat down to the table, the look of surprise was transferred from Christina's face to theirs. for on the platter lay a fine steak, fresh from the refrigerator, and in place of the pot of steaming coffee, sat a pitcher of ice. cold lemonade. Mrs. Bender rang the bell proceeded to lay before him plans for her future campaign. When he had fully Christina appeared, they each made a frantic effort to convince the other that she was responsible for the mistake. Mrs Bender grew angry, and Christina resorted to tears, and while Mr. Bender listened to their confusing explanations he made his breakfast on toa t and lemonade. Matters grew worse rapidly, and in spite of repeated and patient explanations, Christina's ideas were in a state of hopeless onfusion, but neither she nor Mrs. Bender ever thought of the little woman on the hill as the author of all their troubles. At the end of two weeks Mrs. Bender took a street car for Walnut Hill, and seeking out Mrs. Mason asked her if she would not be willing to take Christina back. Mrs. Mason artfully hesitated a moment, and then con-

'I am ro relieved,' Mrs. Ber I keep her in tears half of the time, and she seems so anxious to please me. I can't understand how any one can be as stupid as ste is.'

So Christina came back, and for four years she did faithful service in Mrs. Mason's kitchen, and for the first time in nstruction, and taking up one artic'e after her life that ingenious little woman did not another she told the names distinctly, and live in constant fear of 'anoder place down

My baby has a dreadful cold; with which Mrs. Mason had tampered. The excitement of her experiment added quite a little interest to the usually monotnous work of training a green girl, and Mrs. Mason taught her many mysteries in salads and soups that she had heretofore kept as strictly private knowledge. Christina had reached that stage in her development when Mrs. Mason could give an order for dinner and go out for an afternoon with I just worry over it all the time. There's some assurance that a palatable, well served

I read lately of a bank president who positively refused to have men in positions of trust in his bank whose home life was known to be unhappy. He regarded such men as peculia ly liable to temptation, and one cannot help thinking that he was cor-rect in his estimate of the dangers surrounding such a man. Now you need not tell me that the woman of whom I write cannot help whining, that it is a constitutional failing or a tendency against which she has no power to strive. I don't believe it. She is a peralizing sense of what she owes to herself,
