SONNET.

The forest stream is choked with yellow leaves,
The birds are silent on the naked boughs—
The lowers are dead,—like some lorn spirit grieves
The wandering wind o'er faithless hopes and vows.
Where is the promise of the early year?
'Twas writ on sand and by the hours effaced
Ere to the eager eye the hand was clear
By which the title to our throne was traced.
On, on from dawn to twilight—on with haste,
Seeking, but never finding, dreaming dreams,
Pursuing phantoms through a barren waste,
Deluded oft by phosphorescent gleams,
Till silence gathers round us like a pall,
The light, expire, and darkness covers all.

The London Telegraph on the Prorogation—Lord Dufferin the "True Defender of the Fundamental Rights and Dignity of Parliament."

The London Daily Telegraph supplies our great constitutional law journals, and merchant-lawyers, the following comforting justification of Dord Dufferin's course, most of the arguments in which are identical with THE TRIBUNE'S defence of Lord Dufferin and the famous prorogation:

Constitutional Governments, like 'Governments of Combat,' have their difficulties and dead-locks, as may be plainly seen by the important papers which have arrived from Canada. Before us lies the extremely able vindication which has been addressed by the Governor-General of the Dominion to Lord Kimberley; and a perusal of this document will convince all candid persons that the approbation expressed by Her Majesty's Government of the conduct of Lord Dufferin is well deserved. High intellectual ability is not more clearly evidenced by his remarkable despatch than a true conception of the fundamental rules of Parliamentary sway, and a resolute intention to keep the right path under that subtlest of all temptations for an upright man where his motives are sure to be misapprehended. In saying this we must be particular to state that the question of Lord Dufferin's conduct in proroguing the Canadian Parliament, and that of his Ministers in connection with the very serious charge brought against them regarding the Pacific Railway charter, must be kept distinct. Public opinion—intensely and justly excited in Canada—has mixed the two together; but they lie entirely apart as the Governor General asserts, and the first point to be considered is whether the Dominion House of Commons was properly prorogued. Those who claim to judge the action of Lord Dufferin ought to have fully mastered the facts, of which we can only give here a very brief resume. A motion was made in the Chamber upon the 2nd of April last, imputing against the Macdonald Ministry that 'it had trafficked with foreigners in Canada's most prosperous interests, in order to debauch the constituencies of the Dominion with the gold obtained as the price of their treachery.' These are Lord Dufferin's own words; and it will be therefore seen that he, at least, did not underrate the serious character of the charge. But no proofs were produced by the accuser, and the Ministry obtained a majority against him, which, however, they at once, of their own accord, set aside by moving and carrying the appointment of a Committee of Enquiry. A Bill was introduced to give the Committee power to examine on oath, and Parliament was eventually adjourned on the arrangement that it should meet on the 13th of August to receive the report of the Committee, and be prorogued without further business. In the meantime the Oaths Bill was declared by the Home Government to be ultra vires, and the Committee refused to change itself into a Commission. Before the day of prorogation arrived, certain fresh particulars of the alleged corrupt practices were published, and, as the time approached, the Opposition claimed to have the matter discussed in the Chamber. A strong deputation waited on the Governor General to demand this, and, since the Committee had made no report, and the scandal was deeply agitating the entire country, their case might well appear strong. The Representative of the Crown was in a position which would have forced a weak or ill-trained statesman into the perfectly false move of yielding to the demand of what might prove a minority in the House. Lord Dufferin, however, knew his duty, and, while he prorogued Parliament, as he had notified, and as he was bound to do, he nominated a Commission of three eminent Judges of the Dominion to enquire into the charges brought against the Ministry, appointing the 23rd of October for the re-assembling of the House.

A Fourteen Year Old Boy Shoots his Grandfather to Gratify His Grandmother.

[From the Belleville (Kansas) Telescope.]

Mr. James Rambo, living on Elkcreek, in this county, was murdered on the night of Nov. 1. About midnight of that day his wife, Catherine Rambo, went to a neighbor's in her night clothes and barefooted, and reported having a fuss with her husband, and that he had shot off the end of her finger and cut her ear with a butcher knife, and she wanted some one to go and arrest him. A coroner's inquest was immediately held, which was followed by the arrest of the grandson, John Briels, and Mrs. Rambo.

After they had been in custody for a couple of days the boy confessed that his grandmother and he had been plotting the murder for the past six months, and that he had been practicing with a revolver for that purpose. That on the night of the murder he took his revolver after the old man had gone to sleep, advanced to within a short distance of him, and shot him in the back of the head—his grandmother at the same time standing inside the bedroom door. After he committed the deed he and the grandmother went outside, and the old lady held her finger around the tree while the boy shot it, inflicting a flesh wound. She then had him take a butcher knife and cut a slight gash in her ear, the object of all this being to ward off suspicion and create the impression that there had been a quarrel between her and the old man. The boy further stated that he had thrown the pistol in a pool of water. On search being made by the constable for the pistol, it was found where the boy directed him, with two of the chambers discharged. He also found the mark of the burnt powder on the tree where the finger had been shot at, according to the statement made by the boy. The butcher knife with which the ear had been cut was found close to the house covered with blood and chicken feathers. Close by was found a chicken's head, and a short distance up the path she had travelled going to the neighbor's (Weans), and a little to one side in the grass was found the body of a chicken.

A Deserted Wife Murdered by her Husband's Paramour.

A singular tragedy, growing out of other crimes, recently occurred in Steuben county, N. Y. Some time since Lyman Arnold, a business man in Avoca, mysteriously disappeared, and it was soon discovered that he had forged notes and checks to the amount of $900. Gossip soon had it that a young woman named Emeline Tower had accompanied Arnold in his flight, but this announcement proved premature, for on the night following the disappearance of her husband, Mrs. Arnold was aroused by having a bullet shot into her head, which passed out of her mouth. As she sprang up a person in the room fired two more shots, both producing fatal wounds. There was no light in the room, but in the darkness Mrs. Arnold heard the rustle of a dress and saw a female figure. It was some time before the children came down stairs, they having been chloroformed, as was afterwards ascertained. They aroused the neighbors and the dying woman made her statement about the female figure It was found that the person who had committed the deed had effected an entrance by climbing upon the kitchen roof and then raising one of the chamber windows of the house. Miss Tower was the only person outside the family who knew this route. She immediately afterwards disappeared from the village and went to Detroit, where it soon became evident that she had made arrangements to meet Arnold. Before their plans had been completed, however, the pair were arrested, and will be called upon to answer for their crimes.

Romantic Suicide.

A Russian newspaper publishes an account of a recent tragedy which occurred on a large property near Moscow, managed by a steward who has a large family and is well to do. His eldest daughter was noted for her beauty and accomplishments, and was sought in marriage by a young merchant who was possessed of a large fortune, and resided in a villa in the neighborhood. He was accepted, and having made handsome presents to his fiancee, the betrothal was celebrated. The birthday and fete day of the young lady being near, her lover resolved to give a dinner on the 5th of September and a ball on the following day. All went well, but after the dinner the intended bridegroom drank too much, and showed himself in his true colors, namely as a furious brute. The room was cleared and his fiancee escaped to her room thoroughly disenchanted. Next day the matter was made up, and the ball commenced. In the interval between two dances the fiancee asked the leader of the band to play an old air of which she was fond, and went out to the balcony, whence the explosion of a pistol was shortly afterwards heard. There she was found dead, with a revolver in her hand, and on her was found a note stating that she had found it impossible to survive the destruction of the illusions under which she had been living.

Stamping Out the Small-Pox.

What it is possible to do in stamping out a loathsome disease is well illustrated by the returns of the English Registrar General. In 1872 there was a great deal of small pox in England; in the first quarter of the year it killed no fewer than 7,726 people. Now, it has all but disappeared. Never since the beginning of the present century has there been so light a return. In the eight counties comprised in the South Midland division there was actually only a single death from this disease between Midsummer and Michaelmas, and but fifteen deaths were registered among the 3,250,000 inhabitants of the metropolis. It is also worthy of remark that the precautions taken to ward off cholera seem to have paralyzed the attacks of that usually active scourge, and the mortality nowhere has been large.

The journalists will have their fun, as witness the following from a Cincinnati paper: "A favorite amusement at Laramie is slashing off strangers' ears. One blow is enough for all except Louisville ears."

The custodian of what had been Garibaldi's straw-stuffed bed in Ischia was heard to mutter, on seeing a lady carrying away a few straws as a relic. "They will do it; I've stuffed it six times already since the general left."

A young lady had coquetted until the victim was completely exhausted. He rose to go away. She whispered, as she accompanied him to the door, "I shall be at home next Sunday evening." "So shall I," he replied.

An agreeable and versatile Iowa "local" says: "Cedar River is in a languishing condition. It is very low and confined to its bed. The cat-fish get aground, and have to be helped off the sand-bars by the good-natured boys."

Mr. Holmes, of Fall River, seems to be one of the noblest works of the creator, but he is not fitted to succeed as a politician. The canvassers of the votes made him out elected to the Legislature, but he thought it must be a mistake, and insisted on a careful recount, which proved that he was right, and that his opponent was elected. It is, perhaps, just as well that Mr. Holmes was defeated, for, as we have said, he is obviously unfitted for political life.

Here is another Boston notion which is not bad. Tickets are issued for soup supplied by the Pure Milk Association, at five cents apiece. Each ticket on presentation is good for a plate of soup, to be eaten on the spot, or a quart to be taken home. It is expected that these tickets will be bought by the charitably disposed to be given to such poor people as profess to be suffering from hunger. As they are not good for whiskey, a person can give them away with more satisfaction than five-cent pieces.
