QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. Veterinary.

UTERINE DISCHARGE.

Mare occasionally passes material that resembles brick dust, and it collects on her thighs and legs. J. P. P.

Ans.—This is a discharge from the uterus. The womb should be flushed out twice weekly with a gallon of a warm 2-per-cent. solution of Zenoleum or creolin, introduced with an injection pump or syringe with a long nozzle, and she should be given 40 drops carbolic acid, mixed with a pint of water, either on food or as a drench twice daily until the discharge ceases. V.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Large and very fat colt, whose dam was worked some, became sick on Monday morning. It was dull, breathed heavily; its temperature was 105 degrees. It would not nurse, but would drink large quantities of water. We treated it, but it died on Sunday morning. A post-mortem revealed a paill of yellowish fluid in the lung cavity, and about half-inch of yellowish stuff about the heart. What was the disease? J. B.

Ans.—The foal had pleuro-pneumonia (inflammation of the pleura and lungs). It is very seldom a cure can be effected in such complications. V.

RUPTURE.

Mare became ruptured four days before foaling. The rupture extends from the mamma to the navel, is fifteen inches across and five or six inches deep. Can anything be done, and, if not, would you advise breeding her again? J. S.

Ans.—This may be simply an oedematous swelling of the tissues, and will disappear. If there really is a rupture of the size you state, it cannot be successfully treated, and it would not be safe to breed her again, as if parturition should not be quite easy the muscular contraction would be liable to increase the abdominal lesion. If, after the surrounding swelling subsides, the rupture is found to be small, a cure might be effected by an operation by a veterinarian or possibly by the application of a truss. I would advise you to have her examined by a veterinarian. V.

CALF CHOKES—OBSTRUCTION IN MILK DUCT.

1. Calf eats well and looks well, but after drinking a few mouthfuls it chokes and coughs and the milk runs from its mouth.

2. Heifer had lump in teat last year, but it did little harm. This year there appears to be an obstruction about the center of the teat and the milk comes in a very small stream. If allowed to go dry will she give as much milk out of the other three as she should from four teats? V. M. C.

Ans.—1. The calf drinks too greedily. There is probably a constriction in the gullet which might be dilated by passing a probang, but treatment is seldom successful. Give the milk out of a wide, shallow vessel, which will force it to drink slowly. As it can eat all right it may gradually get better. If it does not improve in a few weeks I would advise you to send it to a butcher.

2. This is a fibrous growth in the milk duct. An operation by a veterinarian, with an instrument especially designed for the purpose, effects a cure in many cases until next calving, when the trouble may recur. She will not give a normal quantity of milk with one quarter dry. I would advise you not to breed her again. Her heifer calves will be predisposed to the same trouble. V.

A visitor of noble birth was expected to arrive at a large country house in the North of England, and the daughter of the house, aged 7, was receiving final instructions from her mother.

"And now, dear," she said, "when the Duke speaks to you do not forget always to say 'Your Grace.'"

Presently the great man arrived, and, after greeting his host and hostess, he said to the child: "Well, my dear, and what is your name?"

Judge of his surprise when the little girl solemnly closed her eyes, and, with clasped hands, exclaimed:

"For what we are about to receive, may we be truly thankful. Amen."

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

Martin Littleton, of the New York delegation, is one of a family of nineteen children, so they say, born to a heritage of poverty and pluck. When he was a small lad down in Texas he fell into the creek one day, and Michael, the next younger brother, ran whimpering to Littleton, the elder: "Dad! Dad! Martin is drowning!"

"Martin! Martin!" repeated the father of nineteen. Then he turned dubiously to his wife.

"Nora," he inquired anxiously, "have we a Martin?"

Once Mr. Gladstone had been cutting down a tree in the presence of a large concourse of people, including a number of "cheap trippers." When the tree had fallen, and the Prime Minister and some of his family who were with him were moving away there was a rush for the chips. One of the trippers secured a big piece, and exclaimed: "Hey, lads, when I dee, this shall go in my coffin." Then cried his wife, a shrewd, motherly old woman, with a merry twinkle in her eye: "Sam, my lad, if thou'd worship God as thou worships Gladstone, thou'd stand a better chance of going where thy chip wouldna burn."

"Why," asked the good man's wife, "are you so thoughtful? You look as if something disagreeable had happened."

"Perhaps," he replied, "I am foolish to feel as I do about it. My congregation has raised a purse for the purpose of sending me to Europe."

"And are you sorry it isn't large enough to enable you to take me with you? Don't let that cause you to feel depressed. It will be very lonely here without you, but I know you need the rest, and I shall be very sensible. I can spend the summer at some quiet, inexpensive place, cheered by the thought that you will return refreshed in mind and body."

"It is very good of you to look at it in that way, my dear. I appreciate your feeling. But the gentleman who made the presentation speech said he was sorry the amount that had been raised was not larger so that I might be able to remain away longer, and somehow it seemed to me that the applause was more hearty at that point than anywhere else in the course of his remarks."

Some years ago the Province of Manitoba wanted to transfer to McKenzie and Mann, the owners of the Canadian Northern, a railway that was a burden to the Province.

There are advocates of Government ownership of all railways in Manitoba, as elsewhere, and these men protested. They said the road should remain the property of Manitoba. They organized a committee and went to Ottawa.

They protested to Parliament, but made little progress. McKenzie and Mann wanted the road, and it seemed the right thing to let them have it. While the committee was in Ottawa, either McKenzie or Mann was there, too, watching the committee.

James J. Hill, the great American railroad man, was reaching up into the Northwest, and the Government ownership people from Manitoba decided to bring Hill into the game, pit him against McKenzie and Mann, and make trouble all around. They sent a long telegram to Hill, detailing their plan, and retired to a convenient waiting place to see what happened.

After a time the door burst open and big Dan Mann, six feet three by three feet six, blocked the doorway. "What are you skunks wiring Jim Hill for?" he thundered.

One man objected to the designation. "I am no skunk," he said, "and we have sent no wire to Jim Hill."

"Well," shouted Mann, as he stepped forward and spread a telegram out on the table, "perhaps you haven't, but there's your answer."

And when the Government-ownership Committee had the nerve to read the telegram they found it was a copy of their own telegram to Hill, wired back by Hill to McKenzie and Mann, which shows whatever you think it should. Saturday Evening Post.
