latform, which he had reached quarter of an hour previous to the ime appointed for the departure of the train, was scarcely a pleasant the crowded waiting-room. Suddenly delicate looking man in ecclesiastical

"Phil!" he cried, involuntarily.

The priest looked at the speaker in

Do you not know me-me, Hugh

'Hugh Maxwell! Yes, yes it is

You must pardon me, but I was engrossed in my own thoughts. What a length of time since we were to-

"Twenty years," Hugh Maxwell answered promptly. "Now you are a 'Father Blake. The old name came readily to my tongue," Hugh Maxwell said. "Are you travelling far?"

Then our ways lie together as far as the junction. Here is our train I'll find an empty carriage."

In a few moments the two were in a first'class compartment; and an obliging official, in response to Hugh's whisper, locked the door of

"Now," he cried, gleefully. "We

He stopped suddenly. The priest

"No, no !" Father Blake gasped as Hugh lowered the window. "The faintness is passing off. Don't call

The color came gradually back to the priest's face; but the train was speeding through the suburbs of the

"I am used, in a measure, to these attacks. The least exertion or ex-

"I came to Dublin for that pur

"Sir Christopher was not hopeful.

Indeed, he warned me that my life

It was some minutes before Hugh

"A year or so," Father Blake re-self. What have you been doing?

You were called to the bar, I know."

"I never practised," observed Hugh

"And why ?-excuse the question

"To answer it involves a story

'Well, then," Hugh said, with short laugh, "at present I am seek-ing a wife. My uncle's father was convert to Catholicity, and the next heir after me-the estate is en-

"Now, let us talk of your-

And are you married,

the lay back deadly pale against

You need not be alarmed."

city when he spoke again.

citement brings one on."

The priest smiled.

Maxwell spoke.

can not be a long one."

"Have you been ill long?"

"You should see a doctor."

The priest held forth his hand.

waiting place; yet he continued pace up and down rather than he came face to face with a

"Sir." he hegan.

Maxwell ?"

priest, 1 see.

"To Fenmore."

the carriage.

can have a-" cushions.

"Well ?"

Hugh Maxwell laughed.

gether in Clongowes !"

ST 10, 1905. ECTORY.

CIETY-Esta. 1856; incorpore 1840. Meets its 92 St. Alexan donday of the meets last Wed Rev. Director P.P.; President, 1st Vice-Presiy; 2nd Vice, E. er, W. Durack; retary, W. J.

ecretary, T. P.

A. AND B. SO. in St. Patrick's nder street, at ttee of Manage hall on the ry month, at 8 Rev. Jas. Kil-H. Kelly; Reces elly, 13 Valles

B. SOCIETY. -Rev. Director. l; President, De , J. F. Quinn, street; treasure 8 St. Augustia , in St. Ann's and Ottawa

A, Branch 26 November, 1883. t St. Patrick's nder street, en ch month. The the transaction on the 2nd and ch month at 8, cers: Spiritual Killoran; Chan-President, J. ice-President, J. ce-President, J. g Secretary, R. erdale Ave.; As-W. J. Macdontary, J. J. Cos ain street; Treay; Marshal, J.

I. J. O'Regan; n. W. A. Hodge R. Gahan, T. Advisers. Dr. . E. J. O'Conill. RCULAR

alls, N.Y., July pecial Act of the ture, June 9, 1879. increasing rapidy O.OOO paid in rears.

MBAULT, ince of Quebec,

BELLS

.,ana W YORK CILY. CHURCH BELLS , Etc.

E BRICKS IN ER? ORRY! ve Lining

IT. re Cement in the ED & CO. Street

inted and public street. Montr

ELANCER,

puty, Frand Council, REET, QUEBEO

"My uncle's only son was drowned ten years ago. Since then I have ectioned by Pope od by Cardinals, veral of whom are lived at Maxwell Towers, and managed the factories and the estate.

Hugh '!' Hugh shook his head. that might only tire you.' "No, no : You do not know how often I have thought of you in quiet

DAME STREET. DENISST BELLS-

tailed—is a rabid Ulster Protestant. You see ?". "Not exactly." a tremendous interest in his COMPANY ols, libraries for his tenants and vorkers. Indeed, Maxwell Towers is > "Well, my uncle dreads that the stealing it." Poor old man! I have held out against his wishes for a long time."

Why ?" "That means the story." axwell's face clouded as he hesitat-for a moment, and then went on. Ten years or so ago I was the Hug uest of a friend of mine. Edward albot. His home was in Galway, at his wife was an extremely handome and attractive woman. His dren were in the nursery. But in aghter of a fellow officer who died great poverty was also an immate the house. This girl, Mary Nor Cathalia, Earhapa the en were in the nursery; and the the house. This girl,

Hugh Maxwell glanced impatiently | The speaker paused a moment. s watch. The draughty railway

MISS BLAKE'S MARY.

thin

08080808080808080808080808080808080808

"I had been invited for the hunting ason, and the house was filled with a merry, fun-loving party. Mrs. Talbot was an ideal hostess, very kind and courteous to all her guests. Towards Mary Norreys both she and her husband showed much consideration, and the girl had a very sincere affection for both, particularly for Talbot. Well, at the end of the season some big personage or other visited the neighborhood, and country people decided to give a ball in the Duke's honor. Mrs. Talbot had a very valuable necklace and som other jewels down from Dublin to wear on the occasion; and on night before the ball the necklace was stolen. Talbot was much annoyedthe necklace had been an heirloom and detectives were called in. They did not succeed in recovering the article, but some suspicion attached itself to Mary Norreys.' "Well ?"

"At Mrs. Talbot's urgent solicitation, the matter was hushed up." "Perhaps the girl was innocent,"

Father Blake said. "She was innocent, though I, un fortunately, did not think so at the time. I had been out in the evening for a long walk, and had lost my way, so that it was the dinner hour when I was crossing a small plat form towards the house. The evening was clear, and I was able to see ouple who were concealed among the trees and were not aware of my approach. One was a low-set, dissi pated-looking young fellow; the other was Mary Norreys. She was handing an oblong packet to her companion when I caught sight of them. I got away without attracting their attention. When the loss of the necklace was discovered I was glad I had kept to myself the knowledge of Miss Norreys' whereabouts that particular evening. You see I cared very much for her. Indeed, I had made up my mind to ask her to be my wife that very evening."

"What became of the girl?" Father Blake inquired.

"I don't know. Two years later I was in London, and at Euston station I saw a man try to fling himself under a passing train. I was able to save him from instant death, but next day he died in a hospital. The authorities had my name and address, and before he died he desired to see me. Of course I went to the hospital; and you can guess my sur prise when I found the man to be the same to whom I had seen Mary Nor reys give a packet on the night that Mrs. Talbot's necklace was stolen The poor fellow was suffering hor ribly, but he was guite sensible. 'You were a guest of Edward Talbot couple of years ago, he said, as I approached the bed where he lay. T saw you once or twice and heard your name.' I answered affirmative ly, and then the man astonished me by declaring that he was Mrs. Talbot's brother.

"Both he and his sister had been left penniless at an early age, and had picked up a livelihood by means not always respectable. Ned Talbot met his sister at some seaside sort, and married her, under the impression that she had no living relatives. The brother had lower and lower, and it was when he was about to be arrested for forgery that he had gone to his brother-in-law's place, hoping that Mrs. Talbot might have sufficient money at her disposal to help him. This she had not; and, as her brother fears the estate may threatened to appeal to Mr. Talbot, into Protestant hands. He has she had asked Mary Norreys to carry to him the package containing the He has built a church, necklace. The poor chap was anxious that I should let his sister know workers. Indeed, Maxwell Towers is of his death. And ten has bow the centre of a little Catholic to hide the truth no longer. I usefulny. It is in Antrim, you know."

derstand the girl that carried the packlage to me was suspected of state may become the property of "I attended the man's funeral, and his cousin, Rupert Maxwell; so he is then sought Mrs. Tabot. She adfererishly anxious that I should mitted the truth, and told me how Mary had kept silent rather bring sorrow to Mr. Talbot. Of the girl's whereabouts she knew nothing I advertised, I employed detectives, but I could find no trace of Mary For a long time I had hopes of discovering her and marrying her. Now I am, as I hinted, journeying South. There is a certain Miss Lawless, nice, quiet girl. She is a great fa-vorite with Mr. Maxwell, and he is anxious that she and I should be-come better acquainted. But here we are at the junction !"

Hugh assisted the priest across the platform to another carriage. The affort of moving brought bn a return of the faintness, and Hugh took a quick resolution.

"You are not fit to travel alone, he said. "I will see you safely he I can send a wire to Mrs. Lawless.' Father Blake made no objection; and that evening Hugh stood at the open window of the priest's dining room looking out on the quiet vil-lage street. His host had retired; and as Hugh stood thinking mournfully of many things, he heard woman's voice in the room above him. She was answering some question that had been put to her. "Oh, yes, the sheets are aired, Miss Blake!" the voice said; and Hugh, disregarding all conventionality and ceremony, left the room and ascended the narow stairs. He was met at the top by a middle-aged lady whom he already knew as Father Blake's

"You were speaking to someone, Miss Blake," Hugh cried. "To whom

Miss Blake's face expressed her astonishment.

"I was speaking to-Mary," she

"Mary! What is her other name?" "Really, Mr. Maxwell, you are act-ng very strangely!" Miss Blake ing very managed to say. "Very strangely. 1 can't understand why-oh!"

Hugh had brushed past the scandalized spinster to meet the woman who emerged from a room to the lighted landing, and had, moreover, seized her hands in his.

"Mary !" , he cried,-"Oh, Mary, where have you been all these years?' Surprised as Mary Norreys was, she kept her composure, and merely

"Don't speak so loudly. Father Blake is sleeping; come down stairs. Miss Blake, won't you come, too?" So a very agitated trio made and received explanations in Father Blake's parlor.

Hugh told in a few words of his meeting with Mrs. Talbot's brother, and then Mary spoke:

"I knew it was the neclelace I had carried to the man, but how could I speak ? Mr. Talbot was so fond of his wife, and he had never known she had a brother. Oh, no, I could improved, says Father Caruana. not wreck his happiness! He had been good to me. I left the house as soon as possible, and went to Dublin, hoping to find employment. I couldn't-I had no credentials, you

When I was almost starving, I met Miss Blake and I told her my story, having first bound her to se crecy. Then I fell ill, and when I was partially recovered she brought me here, for I had been simply known as 'Miss Blake's Mary.' And I have been very happy."

"My brother even does not know Mary's surname," Miss Blake added. We kept our secret."

Three weeks later there was a quiet wedding in Fermore Church. Maxwell's uncle and Miss Blake were the only guests; and Father Blake, much thinner and paler than before performed the ceremony. That afternoon the priest had a much more severe attack than usual, and a day or teo later he died.

There are two or three sturdy boys now in the nursery of Maxwell Tovers, and the elder Mr. Maxwell is very happy. "He spoils the children dreadfully," Mrs. Maxwell says. and his aider and abettor in work of spoiling is Miss Blake, who is the trusted friend and advisor of Blake's Mary."-The Ave Maria.

Have friends, not for the sake receiving, but of giving .- Abbe Roux

THAT'S THE SPOT!

Right in the small of the back. Do you ever get a pain there? If so, do you know what it means? It is a Backache.

A sure sign of Kidney Trouble.

Don't neglect it. Stop it in time.

If you don't, serious Kidney Troubles are sure to follow.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

DOAR RIDNEY PILL CO., Toronto, Oak

A LIFE AMONG INDIANS.

Forty-three years of missionary work among the Coeur d'Alenes, the Yakimas and the Colville Indian tribes of Idaho and Washington is the record of Father Joseph M. Caruana, of the Society of Jesus.

Father Caruana is now at the head of the mission at De Smet, Idaho, on the Coeur d'Alene Reservation, miles southeast of Tekoa. He has been there since the mission was established, in 1880. He performs the triple duties of priest, teacher and postmaster at the little Indian village, but finds time to entertain his friends and takes delight in narrating his unique experiences among the red men.

At De Smet is located a school for Indian boys taught by one of the brothers of the Society, under the supervision of Father Caruana. The school is attended at present by about forty-five pupils. There also a convent and a school for Indian girls with an average attendance of about fifty pupils. This is under the charge of Sister Jane de Chantal, Mother Superior. She has the assistance of two teachers. Girls are admitted to these schools as young as four or five years, and can remain as many years as they wish. The course of study is almost identical with that taught in any school of the State. White girls are also received at the school, but are taught in se parate classes from the Indian children.

Father Caruana began his labors mong the Coeur d'Alene Indians in 1862. Of the Indians then inhabiting the Northwest, this tribe was noted as being the most treacherous and cruel. Their territory had never been invaded by a white man, ex cept one or two missionaries of the Jesuits and a few agents of the Hudson Bay Company. On account of the ferocity of the Coeur d'Alenes the letter feared to establish permanen agencies, as they had done with the Flatheads, Kalispells and other peace ably disposed tribes. But from dens ignorance they have been brought to a degree of enlightenment and hones ty. Well tilled fields, sleek horse and barns and money in bank are possessed by many of the industrious, while the moral and mental con dition of the tribe has been vastly "When I arrived among these In dians they were in a state of degradation bordering on the brute cree tion. The Catholic religion, combined with patient treatment and continual instruction, has brought them to a high degree of civilization and rescued them from the darkness of polygamy and superstition, with their train of vices, which formerly reigned supreme among them. vious to the advent of the Jesuit fathers cruelty and treachery were the best known characteristics of this people. They did not even dare to trust each other, but neighboring camps of the same tribe were in con stant fear of surprise and deception -perhaps of robbery and massacre.

"The change which has bee wrought since then has been truly wonderful, and can only be explain ed by the theory that it was caused by the grace of God working in their hearts. An incident may illustrat this point. At the breaking out of the Nez Perce war Chief Joseph sent a deputation of several warriors to meet the Coeur d'Alenes and per suade them to join the Nez Perces in var against the whites. Chief Seltice acted as spokesman for the Coeur d'Alenes, and said: 'I ask first of all whether you know that we are Catholics?' They answered, 'Yes, we know.' "Then go back to Joseph the line of our own land, to The Nez Perce warriors them away.' then asked to shake hands as good friends before leaving. Seltice then stretched himself to his full height and said, 'We cannot shake hands covered with human blood.' The emissaries of Joseph departed and never again had the temerity to cross the territorial line of the Coeur d'Alenes.

"I wish to relate another incident of the Nez Perce which tends to throw some light on the true character of the people of this tribe. Dur- when there are so many empty ing that war there were several white families scattered over this country who became frightened at reports of self. massacres perpetrated by Nez Perce Indians, and, fearing an uprising among the Cocur d'Alenes, they expected to meet a similar fate.

"The chiefs of the tribes or camps, following the advice of the father superior of the mission, advised them perior of the mission, advised them to remain at their homes, and no harm would befall them. The whites were distrustful, however, and fled to a place of safety, leaving, as they supposed, their houses, stock and household property to certain destruction. The chiefs held a consultation and decided to put two relia- French View of Ireland's Literary ble young memin charge of each abandoned ranch to tale care everything until the owners' fears subsided and they had returned to their homes. The frightend refugees soon became aware of the sincerity of purpose and generosity of the Indians. They returned to their homes and were extremely thankful for the kindness and magnanimity of their dusky neighbors, who would accept no compensation for their ser-"A wonderful change has been wrought in the manner of living and material welfare of the Coeur d'Alenes, as well as in their moral spiritual natures, since Christianity was introduced among them. Their former methods of obtaining a livelihood were almost entirely by hunting and fishing, which was supplemented to some extent by digging and curing camas root, which were found in great abundance in swampy land near the present site of the mission and other places on the reservation. A few cattle of inferior quality were raised and a few patches of potatoes and other root crops cultivated. Their principal article dress was a blanket furnished by the Government, and their places abode were tepees—a number of poles placed together in a conical shape with an aperture at the top, and the sides covered with the skins of apimals killed in the chase. The blankets have now been supplanted to a great extent by the dress of civilization. Comfortable cottages and huildings of modern invention have displaced the tepee, and well cultivated and improved farms mark the progress from an age of savagery to an era of enlightenment and material prosperity."

KEEP CHILDREN WELL.

If you want to keep your children hearty, rosy and full of life during the hot weather months, give them an o'ccasional dose of Baby's Own all forms of stomach and howel months, or it will cure these troubles if they come on unexpectedly. It is just the medicine for hot weather troubles, because it always does good and can never do harm, as it is guaranteed free from opiates and harmevery stage from birth onward, and so intense, so personal, that will promptly cure all their minor ailments. Mrs. J. J. McFarlane, Aubrey, Que., says :- "My baby was troubled with colic until I gave him Baby's Own Tablets, and they promptly cured him. Now when he is a little out of sorts, I give him a dose of Tablets, and them promptly being him back to his usual health." You can get the Tablets from your druggist, or they will be sent mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont

A PERSISTENT NEST BUILDER.

One of the most energetic nest d tell him we shall fight none but builders is the marsh wren; in fact, sublime breath, the infinite stirring him and his people should they cross he has the habit to such a degree that he cannot stop with one nest, but goes on building four or five in rapid succession. And there is no thing slovenly about his work, either. Look among the cattails in the nearest marsh, even within the limits of a great city, and you will find his little woven balls find his little woven balls of reed stems, with a tiny round hole in the side. There is a certain method even in his madness, for the nest in which his wife is brooding her seven eight eggs is less likely to be found around. Then, too, he uses others as roosting places for him-

> "Clarence, dear," said the bride of three short weeks, reproachfully, "it was after midnight when you got home last night."

"Well, if that isn't just like a woman," growled Clarence. "Before we were married you didn't seem to care now late I got home."-Chicago

Character which is wanting in the element of reverence for that which is old, fails of the finest beauty.

Revival

M. Augustine Filon, writing in the Journal des Debats, gives a brief but interesting French impression of the literary renaissance that has become so familiar to American readers. After noting the rise of the various Irish societies-Literary, Folksong and Text; after a word for the Actional Theatre at Dublin and the plays of Mr. Yeats, who, as he puts it, "seems to be recognized by everybody as the Victor Hugo of this Irish pleiad," M. Filon interprets the whole movement, both in its Irish and its English aspect, as "the old duel beginning again, no longer in the field of material and political interests, but in the realm of sentiment and idea." Thus, from this French point of view, "the Land League of twenty-five years ago lives in Gaelic League, and Mr. Yeats in Parnell became poet and dramatist." In the Irish Theatre M. Filon finds not so much real drama as "poetry in concrete form." In fact, throughout this new literature, above all in Yeats-"with charm of originality and fancy, and now and then the grand compelling accent of the ancient Ceits"-he finds "first, an idealism vague but immense, which seems to derive its force consciously or unconsciously from Catholic inspiration and which ranges itself scornfully against the vulgar and grasping commercialism of the Anglo-Saxon. Then a patriotism which our own, ardent as it is, can not comprehend. The explanation of it all is in the fact that Ireland's ideal of herself is never realized, never incarnated; she hovers always aloft in memory or dream untouched by the stains of reality. An actual living country may compromise its honor, may make itself ridiculous or corrupt; but the ideal land keeps ever the inevitable loveliness of things divided-or realities but half reevealed."

And again-"The Irish temperament knows naught of seeking its Tablets. This medicine will prevent blessings in this world; it is divinely idle and contemplative. Ireland still troubles which carry off so many lit- lives that life of the olden time that tle ones during the hot summer ran so much slower and deeper, so wonderfully deeper. The individual was fully aware of his own being; he was not, as to-day, swept along in great social currents absorbed by the collective mass of which he is but a molecule. . . The Irish poetry ful drugs. It is good for children at gives us something of those feelings made the charm of that existence. Humble, rustic life attracts it, and solitude for it has irresistible fascination."

In the following passage M. Filon makes a significant point: "Yet the Celtic soul comes to nature, not in the manner of Rousseau or Wordsworth, to confide to her own emotions, to impose upon her its own inner states of feeling, to demand of her a sympathy she cannot give; rather does it lay itself upon her bosom as if to sleep and dream, to hecome imbued with her calm and strength, to forget and lose itself in her, to fly with the winds and flow with the waters until it feels across of universal life."

Whether this Irish poetry is to "ennoble itself with masterpieces" to continue, "only a repertoire poetic impressions;" actually succeed in "reviving language that belongs to it," or will "bend the iddom of the odious Sassenach to the expression of unwonted sentiments.' Mr. Filon invokes some scores of years to settle .- N.Y. Freeman's Journal.

What is the most beautiful thing in the world? The capacity for affection in the human heart. A loving heart can make a plain face shine, gild the humblest home, convert trifles into precious heirlooms. A few faded flowers, some bit of sword knot or scabbard change to untold value under its consecrating touch. What is it that bestows upon love its deepest tenderness, its most beautiful spirit of sacrifice? What it is that makes it stronger than death? higher love; it is love from the nite source of love—the love of God that beautifies and ballows all our human love. And this love of God is the perfect flower of religion in the soul of man.—H. H. Clarke, D.D.