UNITED STATES CURRENCY.

The currency commission of the American Bankers' Association, which met last month in Chicago, considered the Aldrich Bill and the Fowler Bill. The former proposes the issuing of additional bank notes based upon the security of other than United States bonds; namely, obligation of State, city or county, and first mortgage railway bonds. In the opinion of the committee

"this scheme is impracticable, unwise and financially unsound."

The Fowler Bill was also disapproved, because, "while it contains certain meritorious features, it introduces schemes so far reaching in their scope and touching so many collateral interests not germane to the real solution of our currency difficulties, that we believe its passage would unsettle rather than improve financial conditions." "In these two instances we have had examples of hasty measures following financial panics, and in the two bills herein discussed we have what appears to us to be similar unwise measures following the recent crisis."

The principles enunciated by this commission, approved by the American Bankers' Association in 1907, after being reviewed are believed economically sound. "We have accordingly prepared a plan embodying these principles." This plan proposes that any national bank conforming to a certain standard of age and strength may take out for issue and circulation national bank notes without a deposit of United States bonds as now provided by law. Said notes to be known as "National Bank Guaranteed Credit Notes." The amount of said notes by any national banking association may be equal to forty per centum of the amount of its national bank notes at any time outstanding. It is observable that any bank taking out these guaranteed credit notes for issue and circulation, must deposit with the Treasurer of the United States in lawful money an amount equal
