WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2.

"A VOICE THAT IS STILL"

These are sad days of mourning in the Maple City.

One by one, within an impressively short time, her stalwart sons — men who have been the pioneers of her progress, citizens who have devoted lives of labor to her development, colleagues of intellectual strength and unquestioned integrity — are being called from within her gates to the portals of the Great Beyond.

The sad news last evening of the demise of E. W. Scane cast a gloom over the entire community. Death has taken from us an esteemed resident, one who was universally held in high regard, honored as a citizen, respected and beloved as a man. He has served Chatham faithfully and well in almost every office within the gift of his fellow citizens, he has given an earnest life of service to the public weal.

Chatham mourns herself to-day, while she sympathizes with the bereaved widow and family. The loss is shared by all.

THE BOYD THREATS.

Says the Woodstock Express: Somebody appears to be very anxious to shoulder the blame for the murder of James Quirk, the Brantford hotelkeeper. Letters have been received from Woodstock, Detroit and Buffalo, assuming the responsibility. This fact recalls an interesting circumstance in connection with the Benwell tragedy. It may be remembered that when Birchall condescended to say anything at all in his own defence, beyond a general formal denial, he threw out certain hints about a mysterious "Colonel" who was supposed to have accompanied Benwell and Birchall on the day of the murder and who went into the swamp with Benwell after Birchall had started to return to Eastwood. The story of the "Colonel's" connection with the tragedy was never clearly told. It was merely hinted at. There was neither beginning nor end to it. The "Colonel" appeared suddenly on the scene without any introduction, and disappeared just as suddenly. But it is worthy of note that the "Colonel" wrote a letter, in which he spoke of his connection with the killing of Benwell as a matter of fact, and this letter bore the post mark of a Michigan town, and was doubtless posted there, though it was generally believed to have been written in Woodstock. Indeed, the suspicion was very general that it was written by Birchall himself. The mystery of the "Colonel" has never been cleared up, but there was a general feeling at the time that he had no existence outside of Birchall's imagination. There may be a hint in all this for the Brantford authorities, not to look too far from home for the writer of the letters.

IF CHAMBERLAIN COMES.

Mr. Chamberlain may make a tour of the colonies.

It is time he did so. There is a great deal he ought to know, and see in the outer empire before he undertakes to engineer a scheme for federating the whole system.

A man in the office of Colonial Secretary who has never seen the colonies is both a folly and a danger. If Mr. Chamberlain is open to receive a suggestion, it might be urged on him—in view of a certain remark he recently made about the Canadian climate—that he should make his tour towards the end of next winter, so that he could see our worst weather, and remain a while and see some of our best. He must be made to repent his words about our glorious winter climate.

CHILD SAVERS.

In the ten years of its existence the Children's Aid Society has sheltered 2,680 neglected children, the majority of whom have found homes with good families throughout the Dominion and are now being educated and trained as the natural children of their foster parents.

By the admirable system of the society these children have not only been saved from the evil environments of dissolute homes, but they have been protected from the taint of institutionalism, and are growing up with the same advantages as the children of the best parents. Living in separate homes, surrounded by all the helpful influence of family life, they develop naturally, and their talents have full scope for individual expression. In the best institutions that human ingenuity has devised this is impossible. The necessary discipline makes freedom of action impossible, and the children are brought up in one groove, oftentimes resulting in the destruction of elements of power inherent in the child.

The work of the Children's Aid is worthy of the support of the philanthropically inclined people of the Dominion. It is in good hands, and its work speaks for itself.

HARD ON THE SCOTCH.

Hamilton Herald.

Five of the Toronto Highlanders allowed themselves to be pulled over the line by four Yankee soldiers in a tug of war. Those Highlanders should go away back and put on pants.

FEMININE IDIOCY.

Ottawa Citizen.

A mob of sentimental women waited for Kubelik, the young Hungarian violinist, outside the stage door of a Brooklyn theatre the other evening and when he came out proceeded to hug and kiss and maul him until the police had to come to his rescue. American women's osculatory onslaughts are gradually becoming as much a national institution as lynchings in the South.

THE BRITON'S BURDEN.

Montreal Witness.

A Canadian from the West who has just been spending a few weeks with his relatives in England, says it is very painful for a Canadian to realize the crushing burden of taxation which has fallen on struggling people in Britain, and the uncomplaining way in which they face it, while we Canadians have practically not touched the burden at all, though it is, as it were, for our sakes, as colonialists looking to Britain for defence, that it is being incurred. We think the great majority of Canadians feel exactly as this man does, or would do if brought, as he has been, face to face with the facts.

Consumption and Sulphur.

A German physician recommends to consumptives the sulphur treatment. This consists in the patient living in rooms where one or two drams of sulphur are melted daily on a hot stove. The first ten days there will be felt increased irritation and cough. These soon decrease, and improvement is rapidly felt, and complete cures are often effected if the disease is not too far advanced.

Mice and Peppermint.

K. M. Mikhailoff, a Russian chemist, has discovered that mice have a peculiar dislike to the odor of peppermint. He places small pledges of cotton saturated with peppermint oil in openings made by the mice, and they do not show up for some time. Later the mice make an attempt to return, but the peppermint oil is once more used, and the mice don't come back.

RICKETY CHILDREN.

Loose joints, bow legs, big head, and soft bones—mean rickets. It is a typical disease for the best workings of Scott's Emulsion.

For the weak bones Scott's Emulsion supplies those powerful tonics the hypophosphites. For the loss of flesh Scott's Emulsion provides the nourishing cod-liver oil.

Scott's Emulsion corrects the effects of imperfect nourishment and brings rapid improvement in every way to rickety children.
