In Twenty-two Chapters.

CHAPTER XVI.

Mr. Ward sprang like a tiger towards the cabin skylight, where, through a slit in the sailcloth and tarpaulin, you could see a hand holding a pistol twisting about to get back again; but, though it had most likely come through easy enough, the edges of the stiff tarpaulin now closed round the wrist, and though the owner seemed to struggle hard, and having a peep-hole somewhere, shrieked out as Mr. Ward came on, there was no saving the hand, upon which the young doctor's cut-throat came down like a streak of lightning, cutting it to the bone, when it was at last dragged through, leaving the pistol upon the deck.

Now, this came from the side of the skylight over the milliners' cabin, for so far they did not seem to have got into the one where Mr. Ward and his friends had been; and seeing this, Mr. Ward again volunteered to go down, after we had moved Mr. Bell and his sister for safety under the port bulwarks, thrown another sail or two over the skylight, and then bowed up a bit of an awning, for the sun came through, and beat heavily upon the poor sick man.

But having been made a big man now, and being consulted upon all points, I give in against anybody going down, for, says I: "You're too valuable a man to be spared, Mr. Ward, sir, and one can only go down after that there prog when we're regular dead beat. Let's hold a signal of distress, in case we're seen by any other ship; 'keeping' ourselves steady like glass; watching well, and taking things coolly as we can."

My advice was taken, though if it hadn't been, I don't know as I should have gone and hanged myself; and there was no listening to the movements of the millinery.

Wind falling, came down the street, blowing like glass; while the only sound we could hear was the twitter, twitter of Mr. Tomtit's birds down below, which, by good luck, had got plenty of water and seeds, for, knowing as the little things has sense enough to eat only just as much as is good for them, I had well filled their boxes the day before.

he asked for a rope directly, and heaving him one, we had him aboard lashed and lying down upon the deck besides his mates in less than no time; but the other one swam on and on, diving down every moment so that I couldn't hit him. But I could have done it, if I'd liked, though I did not want to shed more blood, so we let him swim on till he began to paddle behind and shout to Van for a rope, when we could hear the cabin windows opening.

Here, this won't do, sir, I say, and 'Hil here, you Sam, I should, don't you leave that fore-hatch,' for he was coming away, and leaving it unprotected. So he went back, and getting out of a line, I makes a running noise, and going right aft, I tries to drop it over the fellow's head; but he kept dodging and ducking under, till at last I made a feint, and the water being clear as glass, just as he was coming up again I dropped the noose over his head and one arm, drawing it tight in a moment, and there he was struggling—a harpooned porpoise.

I thought I'd lost him once, for a stroke was made at the line, with an outlash out of one of the cabin lights, but I soon towed him out of reach, when Bill Smith threw him the end of a rope, and we had him aboard too.

Now, what with the two wounded men and four prisoners, we had our hands more than full, so after a short bit of consideration, it was decided to risk the opening of the fore-cabin hatch, and make the four men go down one at a time; we, for humanity's sake, keeping the prisoners who were wounded.

So we took the four with their hands lashed, and then with Mr. Tomtit only on guard, we four stood ready; and Mr. Ward giving the signal, Sam raised the hatch, when one fellow leaped up savage, but I had a marine-spike ready, and down he went again quicker than he came up. Then another tried, but I served him the same, when they stopped hatch, till I sang out that we were ready to go.

And making them go was another; for the first fellow turned rusty and wouldn't go; till, seeing that half-measures were no good, I nodded to Mr. Ward, and he put a pistol to the fellow's ear, and at the same time I gave him just a tap on the head with the marine-spike, and the others followed.

Sam clapped the hatch down so quickly that the last chap's head must have felt it; but that put a stop to their firing up at us; and this being done we felt safe, though none the less compelled to keep a strict watch.

And so the day wore away—not a long day at all—for rather dreading the night as I did, it seemed to come on quickly, and this was the time I felt sure the milliners would make their attack, perhaps to get the better of us.

At one time I was for taking to the biggest of the two boats left, and leaving them to it; but without provisions, it was like running to meet death, and I was obliged to give up that idea, for, after all, it would only have been to get away till such time as they could overtake us and run us down.

The night turned out bright and starlight; and after making the best arrangements we could for the watch, we patiently waited for any new dangers that might befall us. Even Mr. Bell, sick as he was, insisted upon taking his turn at watching, and having now plenty of arms, he sat with his sister by him to guard the fore-hatch, Miss Bell going from time to time to the side, and keeping an eye to the cabin window. Two or three times, too, she came to me, and talked about our position in whippers; and somehow or another she seemed to grow upon me, until I swore to myself that I'd die sooner than the poor lass should be left to the tender mercy of the scoundrels who had seized the ship.

We had two or three false alarms during the night, but that was all; and the next day broke, finding us all half-famished; and now it seemed that either we must attack Van's party in the after-cabin, or one of us must go down and try for some provisions.
