Desperate Remedies
By Thomas Hardy
AUTHOR OF "A PAIR OF BUCKEYES," "THE TRUMPET-MAJOR," ETC.

"This is proof," said Owen, holding up the paper.
"No proof at all," said Manton, hotly.
"It is not a death-bed confession, and there are the only things of the kind held as good evidence."
"Send for a lawyer," Owen returned, "and let him tell us the best course to adopt."

"Never mind the law-let me go with you," said Owen, still holding up the paper.
"You will let me go with you, won't you?" she said, turning appealingly to Manton.
"I will, with more pleasure," said Manton, with more pleasure. "I have no objection to your brother sending for a lawyer."

"I was getting on for 12 o'clock, but the proprietor of the hotel had not gone to bed, and I was curious to see the first floor, which was an occurrence unusual in the quiet family lodging. Owen looked over the banisters, and saw him standing in the hall. It struck Owen that the wisest course was to take the landlady to her room, and to prevent the episode of discovery from becoming a public piece of news, he called the landlady up to where they stood, and told him the main facts of the story.

"The landlady was fortunately a quiet, unpretentious woman, and a moderate smoker. She knew the very man you were to see—the very man," looking into the exact water of the candle-flame. "Sharp as a needle and not over rich. They will put you all straight in no time—trust me for that."

"He is in bed by this time, for certain," said Owen.
"Never mind that—Timm knows me. I know him. He'll oblige me as a personal favor. Wait here a bit. Perhaps, too, he is up to some party or other—he is a nice, jovial fellow, sharp as a needle, too. He went downstairs, put on his overcoat, and went to the door. The three persons stood motionless, awkward, and silent in the midst of it. Cytherea pictured to herself the long weary minutes she would have to stand there, while the sleepers came and went, prepared for consolation, till the conversation between them seemed unendurable to her—she could never last out the time. Owen was annoyed that Manton had not quickly arranged with him at once; Manton at once saw Owen's homeliness of idea in proposing to send for an attorney, as if he would be a condition of insoluble proof.

THE WOMEN VOTERS OF LONDON
We are probably aware of the movement to reduce the number of licenses in the City of London from 60 to 50. The City Council is asked, by petition, to pass a by-law to that effect; its second reading, which will be the question to the electors at the same time as the voting for mayor, is scheduled early in January.
