On Thirty-fourth street, in New York, the conductcoroner made the statement at the opening of the inquest at 5 o'clock last evening at Stephenson's undertaking establishment.

Following the above inquest Corone MacLaren also opened an inquiry into the death of Mrs. Ball, who was found frozen on Sunday in her squalid home on Elizabeth street. Concerning her. the coroner said that he believed there was negligence on the part of the civic authorities, and that if the machinery der, something should be done. It was a shame that such a sad thing should happen in the city of London. At the first inquest, the coroner, as-sisted by Sergt. Burrill, of the police department, swore in the following jura deep wound in the abdomen and abrasions on the lower portions, though the face and upper portions were not scratched. Dr. MacLaren explained to the jurors that he had endeavored to see if there was any blame attachable to anyone, and when he made inquiries of the C. P. R. men, they had refused to say anything until they had seen their company's solicitor. This, he thought, very suspicious. He had neard, too, that it was not a freight train which had run the man down,
