500,000 gallons, as some critics declare. It is the opinion of competent engineers that the spring water supply can be increased to 2,000,000 gallons. Engineer Moore, however, declares that he will not figure on possibilities but on the actual flow.

It combines the best points on the Maury and Chipman schemes. An Explanation.

Mr. Maury, in his scheme, did not advocate that the water in the Cronyn and White springs be allowed to run into the river and then filtered. He suggested in his scheme that the Cronyn and White springs be gather ed by mains and kept from the river altogether. In this manner, 800,000 gallons spring water would not cost anything after the initial cost of collecting. Following up Mr. Maury's reasoning lot of spring water is just as beneficial as a little, and as a result the commission has added Kilworth which will add half a million gallons serve for fire purposes only, until such time as the spring water supply is absolutely inadequate to meet the city's need.

High Pressure. High pressure is not the least favorable portion of the scheme. It will give the city the only adequate fire protection it has ever had. London will be in line with Toronto put in high pressure systems, at a very large expenditure of money. It will reduce the insurance rates 25 per cent. One man figures that on $1,000 insurance he would save $4 50, Take a pencil and figure out how much that would mean annually to the business men of London. With plenty of water, the city would be protected so far as protection is possible. With this scheme, there will be 5,-000,000 gallons of water in the north end available for fire purposes. There would also be a couple of nillions at Springbank. The Cost. The items of cost, with details, are s follows: Kilworth, 500,900 gallons of water,
