

large number of smaller companies expressed an interest in learning about Canadian sources of supply for possible substitution for higher priced offshore imports now being purchased.

These importers indicated a preference to receive information on products from Canadian firms by mail, personal contact by the company and through industry publications. A key consideration in importing the Canadian product was said to be lower prices, although the non-availability of the product in the U.S. domestic market also featured in the survey responses.