

Japan in everything that relates to nationality as anything can be. If we are to make up our minds that the Anglo-Saxon race is, so far as Western nations are concerned, to police the Pacific in which the interests of the United States are now larger than those of Great Britain, and if we conclude that we can do this best with the co-operation of the one Eastern nation which has shown that it sympathizes with Western civilization, then the material peace of the world, both East and West, rests with Great Britain, the United States and the Empire of Japan. [Applause.]
