SHIPBUILDING AMONG

THE FIRST TO SHOW
AFTER-WAR SPURT

About 10,000,000 Tons New Ships Required to Maintain Tonage of Before the War—Big Boom For Steel Makers

(Financial Times.)
From present indications, shipbuilding will be among the first industries to show activity at the end of the war.
The United States, Great Britain, Japan, Canada, Norway and Australia have entered as competitors in shipbuilding.

Before the war the world had just sufficient ships to take care of international commerce. There was a steady annual output to keep pace with the demand and with the normal maritime losses. This annual output of merchant vessels was as follows:

Year	Number	Tons
1915	748	1,201,639
1914	1,819	2,552,753
1913	1,750	3,392,982
1912	1,719	2,901,780
1911	1,599	2,650,140
1910	1,277	1,967,953
1909	1,053	1,602,057
1908	1,408	1,888,386
1907	1,788	2,778,088
1906	1,836	2,919,763
1905	1,576	2,214,922

Since 1914, with the diversion of shipyards to naval construction, shortage of labor and other causes, the annual output decreased, leaving shortage of new construction, conservatively estimated at 3,500,000 gross tons. The amount of shipping destroyed up to the end of October 1915 was 3,500,000 tons. In addition to these ships to be replaced is the average annual building of nearly 5,000,000 tons, based on 1911-18 figures, and an indeterminate quantity of construction for ships in service, due to incessant depreciation.

10,000,000 Tons New Ships

Destructions continue and the improvement in the number of vessels launched has been comparatively slight.
Therefore, if the war came to a sudden conclusion within a few months, shipbuilding yards would face the problem of constructing 10,000,000 tons of new ships with a capacity of about 8,500,000 tons, in addition to the ships under construction and on order in the current year, while the number of ships to be replaced increases daily. American yards have orders to keep them busy up to 1918. German shipyards are working on mammoth liners, some of which have been delayed since 1913.

According to an important American shipbuilder, in the construction of 10, 000,000 tons of steamships, the quantity of structural steel, apart from machinery, would be between five and six
