Several engagements were broken through parental interference, but the lovers made up each time, and their affection strengthened accordingly.

When the young man attained his majority he expressed his intertion of holosing no time in making Myrsie his wife, and his parents set a watch on his movements. He had arranged to be narried last Thursday night, and he and the young lady started for the minister's in a carriage. On the road the horses were stopped and the lovers forcibly parted by friends of the Whitmans and told they could not marry.

On Friday afternoon Whitman and Miss Lyon met at the minister's, and were about to be married, when the young man was arrested and locked up on a warrant sworn out by his mother. Several of his friends went bail for him, and that night he started for a party in company with a young lady, while Miss Lyon, accompanied by a mutual friend, left her home for the same place.

On the road an exchange of partners was made, and as neither Whitman nor his sweatheart have since been seen, it is as fe to presume that they are married and happy. All the people in Naples sympathize with the young people.
