

IN DEN OF THIEVES.

Strange Story of Girl Found in Boy's Clothing.

"Ernestine Hamilton's" Narrative of Trips to Brooklyn—Had Been Newsboy and Bootblack in New York, Climped the Under World of Boston in Company With a Female Pickpocket, and Tramped the Country Selling Baskets—Never Stole a Dollar.

Capt. Joseph Dugan, who is taking the place of Chief Inspector Watts, now on a tour across the country with Supt. Pierce for the purpose of getting information on which to improve Boston's police force, believes that "Ernestine Hamilton," the young woman arrested in Sharon Tuesday, disguised in the attire of a boy, is a runaway.

After the first interview yesterday noon with the girl by Inspectors Wolf and Rooney and the Sharon constable, Capt. Dugan was closeted with her for an hour or more, and questioned her very closely. At the end of this interview he told a group of reporters that he believed, notwithstanding the story she told, investigation would prove that the girl had run away either from relatives or a guardian. This opinion was based upon the young woman's actions while in his presence and the contradictory stories she told. "She ran away from beginning to end," was one expression of the captain's.

The story she told at the first interview, and which was printed yesterday afternoon in the Globe, differed in many respects from that told later to Capt. Dugan. The captain, being cross-examiner of many years' experience, drew from the young woman particulars which others had failed to get. This is the story she told to Capt. Dugan, as he told it to the reporters, last evening:

"She said she was born (getting the date from those whom she had lived with) on Sept. 19, 1885. Her first recollection was when she was about four years old. She recalls being taken away from some place where she was living to a place some distance away. Where she was taken from, or by whom, she said she did not remember. Her next recollection was while living with a family in Fitchburg, Mass. The family consisted of Mrs. John Lane, Thomas, a son, Mary Silver, a sister of Thomas, and Mrs. Francis, another sister.

WENT TO SOUTH TRIPO.

At the age of 7, the girl said, she was taken to South Tripuro, where Mrs. Francis had a boarding house. She remained there until she was 9 years of age, living with Mrs. Francis. At South Tripuro, she said she attended public schools. Mary Stocker, a teacher, was greatly interested in the young girl, and hearing her say that she had been taken away from her parents, and their names and address kept a secret from her, the school teacher interested George H. Peabody, who at that time was living in South Tripuro, in her behalf. Even at the age of 9 years the girl seemed to realize that she had been kidnapped for some purpose, and impressed Miss Stocker with her story.

Mr. Peabody took the child to his home, where she became one of the family, and remained for a year or more, and when Mr. Peabody was called to Fitchburg, Mass., as secretary of the Y. M. C. A., she was taken with him. Mr. Peabody still resides in that city, and holds the position of secretary.

Capt. Dugan believes that up to that point in her story the young woman told many things which were true. Her subsequent autobiography, Capt. Dugan does not believe. After remaining in Fitchburg some time a young girl calling herself Edith Simonds appeared in that city and made her acquaintance. Ernestine says that Edith had a great influence over her, and after an acquaintance of several weeks caused her to leave Mr. Peabody's home and go with her to Brooklyn.

She said that after a while she found that Edith Simonds was a thief, that she worked as a domestic in houses simply for the purpose of locating a place where burglars could make "big hauls." The Simonds girl took her to a house on Washington street, Brooklyn, and she remained there four days. Seeing that the Simonds woman was not a good woman, she ran away from her.

Not having any money or place to stay, she looked for work. Short skirts did not seem to bring money to her, and at the suggestion of a newsboy she put on long trousers and became a newsboy and bootblack. She remained there for a time and then came to Boston, where she happened to come here on whose advice, or where she got her money, the captain failed to get from her.

On arrival here, she says, she lived with a family in East Boston, but on what street she does not know. She was positive, however, that the name was P. C. Freeman. She stayed there only three days.

The next place she recalls being at was at the home of Mrs. L. E. Vose or Vokes, 1889 Cambridge street, Cambridge. She remained there, doing domestic work, for more than a year and a half. She was contented until the Simonds woman came across her path again (how the Simonds woman knew where she was she did not say), and then she was ready to make another move.

She said that the Simonds woman caused her to go to the local police station, where she remained for two weeks and then came back to Boston. She was dissatisfied with the way she was treated in Brooklyn, claiming that all the while she was in a "nest of criminals," who tried to get her to go to the streets and to the local places where burglars might be committed. It was that, she said, that caused her to run away and return to Boston.

LED A LIVELY LIFE.

On her return here she secured work in a restaurant and after working there a short time the Simonds woman showed up again. This time she brought with her an 18-year-old girl whose first name was Mary and whose last name she did not recall. All she knew about "Mary" was that she was a pickpocket, and robbed men in hotels. On leaving the restaurant to accompany Mary about town she met numerous men and women of the "under world" whose names she did not recall.

Her acquaintance with these men and women led her into company with a woman pedlar, who for a year or more kept her with her travelling about the country selling baskets and small wares. They travelled as Egyptians, getting their living as they went from place to place by begging and by selling baskets.

She told the captain that it was while peddling these baskets that she travelled toward Sharon, but she said it was not for the purpose of selling baskets that she went into the village of Sharon. Her story was to the effect that in some way or other she strayed away from the woman pedlar Monday, and after losing her decided that she would become a farm hand.

It was for the purpose of getting a job on some farm in the country that she walked the highways to Sharon. She denied absolutely having any connection with thieves in Sharon or anywhere else, except with the Simonds woman, and said she never stole a dollar in her life.

During the interview with Capt. Dugan the prisoner was more or less nervous. The captain noticed that she pulled her short knickerbockers down at the knees every few seconds, and shifted her legs frequently. To him it was apparent that she was not used to small attire, and he questioned her as to how long she had worn trousers and what made her appear so unaccustomed to them.

She accounted for her nervousness by saying that she had always worn long trousers and the knickerbockers made her nervous. Asked where she got them she said she made them herself out of a cast off skirt, and in cutting them had made them too short. The shortness was another reason for her nervousness, she said.

After the interview, Capt. Dugan caused Inspectors Rooney and Wolf to make inquiries at addresses which she had given in and around Boston. At Cambridge Mrs. Vose (or Vokes) was seen by the inspectors. She told them that Ernestine worked there about a year ago, and went from there to work in a restaurant on Avery street. It was in July, she thinks, that Ernestine left. It was on the recommendation of Mr. Peabody that she was employed.

From other sources the inspectors learned that the girl had worked in Frazer's restaurant at Cottage City. HER EARLIER STORY. According to an earlier story of the girl she lived six years with Mrs. Thomas on Montgomery street, Brooklyn. This woman, she said, when dying, told her she had been kidnapped. As the child of death crept over the old woman she passed a letter to Ernestine, saying it would lead her to her relatives. In the girl's pocket, when arrested, was an extract of this letter. The paper is yellow with age.

Theodore Hamilton. This is your niece. Take care of her and be kind to her. Ask your father if you do not know her, and he will tell you all about it. Her name is Ernestine Hamilton. I trust her to God. Edith. (Signed) "H. R. Hamilton."

The girl said that it was directed to where Theodore Hamilton could be found, but she had never seen him, he having gone away from the address.

The prisoner is held as a vagrant, and was taken to Dedham jail late in the afternoon.

CONSTIPATION.

Causes Headache, Abdominal Pains, Piles and in Severe Cases Insanity and Apoplexy.

It is a common mistake to conclude that Constipation is not a dangerous condition. Although at first it is only accompanied by slight inconvenience and pain, yet if not corrected, it will inevitably lead to very dire results.

Great care should be used in selecting a remedy for constipation, because if a violent purgative is employed, it is sure to set up pain, irritation and inflammation, and result finally in piles.

The experience of those who have tested all the cures for constipation, seems to prove that Ferrozone is the most agreeable and satisfactory treatment. It makes the bowels so well ordered that natural and unassisted action is established. Nothing can give so immediate sense of comfort and relief, and pains in the head, and stomach, and in the intestines, disappear almost at once.

Ferrozone is very mild and certain in its action, and never causes irritation or distress. Ferrozone can be taken early as long as regularity and it in no way interferes with business or pleasure, and nothing may be feared from its use however prolonged it may be.

For Constipation, Piles and Sick Headache, Ferrozone stands unrivalled. The driver of the city Express Company, who suffered from piles, says:—"Constant sitting on the wagon seat, produced a rectal irritation, which combined with constipated condition of the bowels brought on a severe attack of piles. I used without benefit, different ointments and other remedies; but got quick relief and most satisfactory results from Ferrozone. I can recommend Ferrozone to all who suffer from piles."

Ferrozone always cures, and can be purchased at any reliable drug store for 50 cts. a box, or three boxes for $1.25. Sent to your address by mail. If price is forwarded to N. C. Poison & Co., Kingston, Ont. Recommended and sold by A. Chipman Smith & Co.

AUGUSTA, Ga., May 30.—The trouble at the King mill was further complicated today by the walking out of the local men on a peremptory order by Secretary Herbert. The striking operatives have been ordered to vacate the company's houses and are moving out.

ANNUAL MEETING OF ALUMNI.

The annual meeting of the University of New Brunswick Alumni Association was held in the library of the University last evening, J. D. Phinney in the chair. Ralph J. Freese of Sussex, a member of the junior class, was awarded the gold medal. The examiners were Dr. H. S. Bridges, Aid. Millidge, St. John, and Dr. W. P. Dole.

On the recommendation of Prof. Scott, the Bryden Jack scholarship was awarded to J. D. Freese, with a general average of 81. It was decided to increase the Bryden Jack memorial from $12 to $1,000. There was a lengthy discussion on the present system for the recommending of honorary degrees. The matter was referred to the council, to report at the next meeting.

The association put themselves on record as hoping that the university will be favored with one of the Cecil Rhodes scholarships. The following committee was appointed to revise the by-laws: J. D. Phinney, J. D. Hazen, M. P. F., Dr. Scott, D. C. Foster and O. S. Crockett. The following officers were elected: J. D. Phinney, president; Dr. Atherton, 1st vice pres.; Dr. Murray MacLaren, 2nd vice pres.; Rev. Archdeacon Neales, 3rd vice pres.; H. D. V. Bridges, secretary. Council: B. C. Foster, Dr. Bridges, A. F. HON. M. C. HERBERT

Will Probably be Next British Ambassador to U. S.,

But His Appointment Will Not be Made Till Lord Pauncefoot's Remains Arrive in England.

LONDON, May 30.—Hon. Michael Herbert, who is normally secretary to the British embassy at Paris, will probably be the next British ambassador to the United States in succession to the late Lord Pauncefoot.

Mr. Herbert's appointment to this post was probably not announced until the remains of Lord Pauncefoot arrive in England. The only question in regard to Mr. Herbert's selection for the Washington post is the approval of King Edward.

The Associated Press understands that His Majesty is taking a keen personal interest in the matter of Lord Pauncefoot's successor, but the King will not be asked officially to confirm or disapprove the candidate to be sent to the United States for the time during which the government pays respect to the late Lord Pauncefoot's body while there is no reason to believe that King Edward will object to Mr. Herbert, who has the official backing of both English and American diplomats, there must always remain an element of doubt in the matter until the suggested appointment receives the royal sanction and especially in view of the acute attention which His Majesty has given to this important position.

The matter of Mr. Herbert's going to Washington has been still further complicated by the unexpected delay in sending over Lord Pauncefoot's body. The British government, officially, fully expected Lord Pauncefoot's body would arrive in England prior to the coronation of King Edward, and it is not a little disconcerted by the receipt of despatches which state that the body of Lord Pauncefoot will not occur until July.

The determination to select Mr. Herbert as ambassador to the United States was reached after many consultations with those who are best fitted to voice an opinion in the matter. While nominally secretary to the British embassy at Paris, Mr. Herbert was really minister plenipotentiary to France, and as such he frequently visited the United States in the absence of Sir Edmund J. Monson, Great Britain's ambassador there.

Mr. Herbert's marriage with Lella, daughter of Richard T. Wilson of New York, as a result of which he became closely related to the Vanderbilts, the Ogden Golets and the Astors, will not in any way interfere, according to opinion here, with his usefulness as Great Britain's ambassador to Washington. Mr. Herbert's receipt at New York of the post of ambassador, until 1889 and as secretary to the British legation there from 1892 to 1893, and his work as British agent on the Venezuelan commission, eminently fit him for the important duties which he is now to perform.

At Paris Mr. Herbert's present position is somewhat curious, for while holding the rank of a full fledged minister, he has to take second place when Sir Edmund J. Monson, the ambassador, is resident in France.

A curious feature connected with all the British diplomats who were considered by the British foreign office as possible candidates to fill the vacancy at Washington, is that they all have American wives. Sir Henry Howard, who is now Great Britain's minister at the Hague, and who was for many years attached to the British legation at Washington, married Miss Riggs of Washington.

Sir Francis R. Plunkett, the British ambassador at Vienna, married Miss Morgan of Philadelphia. Lord Curzon of Kedleston, viceroy of India, married Miss Letler of Washington; Austin Lee, Great Britain's commercial attaché to France, Belgium and Switzerland, married Miss De Witt with herland, married Miss De Witt with herland, married Miss Pinchot of New York.

Before the new ambassador at Washington takes up his duties, the position of the British legation there will probably be put upon a par with the highest paid in Great Britain's diplomatic service, namely, that which is paid her ambassador at Paris, 9,000 pounds ($45,000) a year.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—While no official information can be had tonight as to whether the government has been sounded as to Mr. Herbert's acceptability as ambassador, it is believed by people familiar with his standing here while secretary of the legation and charge d'affaires, that his selection would be entirely agreeable to the United States. He filed his post here with tact and ability and was of a courteous and genial personality. He had charge of the legation for considerable intervals in the absence of the head of the British legation at Washington, and his conduct was commensurate with the high position he held when it was learned he had been promoted and ordered abroad.

SMASHED WINDOW TO GET FOOD.

A Hungry Youngster Tempted by Good Things in a Grocer's Window Broke Glass to Get at Them.

A little ragged urchin, about eight years old, weel, shivering and half famished, stood looking with ravenous eyes into the grocery window of N. S. Springer on Simonds street about half-past ten o'clock last night. The sight of the eatables inside excited the cravings of his empty little stomach till he became become irresistible, and picking a paving stone from the gutter he slammed it through the glass that barred him from the good things and dashed the window to splinters. The owner of the store, who had just returned from a walk, saw the occurrence, grabbed him and hustled him to the north end police station.

Here he sobbed a pitiful story of privation interjected with earnest protestations that the window was not an accident. "The stone just bounced in," he said. "I didn't go fer to steal nothin'. I wouldn't darst steal nothin' fer me father said he would lick me if I did. Ain't had no money 'an' then I only had a piece of dry bread and a cup of tea. I'm awful hungry an' me feet is cold." And he shivered before the fire—a picture of fearful misery.

A man who was in the station produced a couple of bananas, and the way the youngster got outside of them removed all doubt regarding his hunger. Then a cop with gruff threatenings of a terrible lashing to follow handed him something substantial from his lunch basket. That also vanished with wonderful rapidity and was followed by more until he was satisfied and warm, when he was curled up comfortably to sleep.

The boy gave his name as George Goldie. He said he lived near the suspension bridge and had been visiting his brother's wife at the foot of Portland that afternoon. "I didn't git nothin' to eat there," he said in answer to a policeman's question, "because she had nothin' to eat in the house only a piece of dry bread, and she told me to go home. I don't know why I didn't go home. I was goin' home anyway. I want to go home now only I don't know what my father will do to me."
