Business schools may import teachers

TORONTO (CUP) — The country's business schools, already under the gun because of staff shortages, have received an exemption from the federal government's "Canadian-first" hiring policies.

The policy, which still applies to all other university departments, requires universities to advertise teaching positions in a two stage process. In the first stage only the applications of Canadians and permanent residents are accepted. If a suitable applicant cannot be found, a second round of advertising begins whereby foreign applicants are considered.

Under the present exemption, business schools may advertise for Canadian and foreign applicants simultaneously.

The policy, which according to university officials can prolong the hiring process by a maximum of six months, was criticized as being a deterrent to potential applicants. The University of Toronto and some other universities also fear that a policy that advocates the hiring of Canadian academics rather than hiring American professors, could threaten the quality of education universities offer.

Exemptions from the advertising policy may be a victory for business schools but it will do little to resolve their dire shortages of teaching staff. There are 200 faculty positions currently unfilled at Canadian business schools.
