Before her marriage Mrs. Seelye was Miss Patterson, and was the last representative of the older generation of that family who lived in this section of the town.

PRIVATE HARRY WILCOX St. George, May 31.—The funeral of Private Harry Wilcox, of the 115th Battalion, who died in St. John on Saturday, was held here yesterday. He was only twenty years of age, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wilcox. Before enlisting he was employed in the pulp mill and was well liked and popular.

JAMES J. HILL St. Paul, Minn., May 29.—Mr. Jas. J. Hill, railroad builder, capitalist and most widely known figure of the northwest, died at his Summit avenue residence at 9:30 o'clock this morning as a result of an affection due to bowel trouble.

Mr. Hill was unconscious for nearly twelve hours before he died. Dr. Herman M. Briggs, of New York, and Dr. Stanley Seager, together with members of the immediate Hill family, were at the bedside when the end came.

James J. Hill, one of the greatest and most successful railway builders and organizers and one of the most remarkable financial geniuses of his time, was born on a backwoods farm in the vicinity of Rockwood, Wellington County, Province of Ontario, on Sept. 16, 1838. His father was one of the early settlers of that region, coming from the north of Ireland.

Mr. Hill discovered "the bread basket of the world" in the great Northwest, led in its development from a wilderness in what now comprises six wealthy States, and he blazed a trail for transportation which reached eventually from Buffalo to Asia, with a total mileage of rail and steamship facilities that would nearly rival the earth. That he roughly spanned the story of his achievement. While Mr. Hill built up for himself and his associates an immense fortune, he also helped to create for the settlers along his lines a wealth of over five billion dollars in real property which is represented by the value of the 400,000 farms and his 65,000,000 acres of improved land.

Upon his retirement, at 69, the "streak of rust" he had bought thirty years before had expanded to more than 4,000 miles and it was earning gross profits of more than $66,000,000 a year, and carrying 15,000,000 tons of freight annually. He still retained a hand in the Great Northern's policy as chairman of the board of directors, while his son Louis, who had worked up from the humblest position of his father's railroad became president.

GEN JOSEPH S. GALLIENI Paris, May 27.—General Joseph S. Gallieni, former Minister of War, died at Versailles to-day, following an operation for bladder trouble. Short before he had a large operation for transfusion of blood was performed, but it had little effect. He was extremely weak and unable to take nourishment. His son and daughter were at his bedside. His death, while not unexpected, created profound grief, as he was idolized by the French people, particularly the poor, who regarded him as the saviour of Paris during the critical days of August, 1914. His funeral will be the occasion of a notable military and civil demonstration.

Gallieni was a much better man than Joffre when the war began. He had earned a high reputation as a soldier, a pioneer, an administrator, in France's great and growing colonial empire. He was exceedingly well known and admired as an author, the writer of two popular and graphic books on African travel and of a finely written volume, "Nine Years in Madagascar," the great island which he practically added to the French domain. As a lecturer, too, as a scientist, as a charming figure in the social life of Paris, he was justly popular.

Gallieni received his commission in July, 1870, just in time to enable him to take part in the Franco-Prussian war. After that, with the rank of Lieutenant of Naval Infantry, Gallieni went out to the French colonies in the Indian Ocean. His next service was in West Africa, where, beginning with the small colony of Senegal, France was preparing to build up the huge territory of the Western Sudan. He wrote graphically of his trip through the wild country to the Niger river, when, after months of difficult negotiations, he succeeded in obtaining a treaty very favorable to the expansion of France. In 1891, Gallieni, now colonel, was transferred from West Africa to the extreme east of Asia to Tonkin. In the meantime, he had also served in Martinique, French West Indies. After Tonkin came Madagascar. On his return to France he commanded successively two army corps, the second of which was stationed at Lyons, of which he was made Military Governor. Then he went to Paris to the War Ministry, to serve on the Supreme Council of War, and that position he held, as well as chief position in the Department of Colonial Defence, when the war broke out, whereupon he was appointed military governor of the entrenched camp of Paris, though he had reached the age limit for retirement in 1913, but was maintained in active service by decree in recognition of his services as Governor-General of Madagascar.

After the notable part taken by Gallieni in the battle of the Marne, when he rushed 80,000 troops of the Paris garrison to the battle line in taxis at the crisis of the struggle and thereby turned the tide, he was appointed Minister of War in the reconstructed Cabinet, where he devoted himself with remarkable energy to the elimination of red tape and favoritism in the administration of the army. Illness compelled his resignation on March 6. Gallieni had been called the "Kitchenier of France, having the same sort of steely, piercing eyes, heavy eyebrows, high cheekbones, powerful lower jaw and bristling moustache; also he had the same characteristics as a soldier and administrator.

MADAME JANE DIEULAFOY and Mesdames Morton Kennedy and Auriel Brooks with Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Kent.
